Agra Stone Utensils

Have Call in India

Many and varied are the utensils that Hindu stonecutters put on the market. Chief among them are curry-stones and grindstones. Every well-conducted Indian household must have one or both, and the curry-stone from Agra must sooner or later be imported into all kitchens. There is some peculiar virtue in the Agra curry-stone. It is so ground and polished as to resist the onslaughts of the best bottle washer, and the acid masala does not penetrate its pores and break it.

Stone pestles and mortars are popular for the same reason. They are much sought after by apothecaries and the weird contingent of charlatans who make medicine for India's millions. Marble pestles and mortars are very useful for pounding up drugs, and stone ones are generally used for blacksalt, alum and other hard substances that require less care than ere of new and toe of frog. But stone pestles and mortars are not the monopoly of medicine.

They are turned out by the hundred for the use of the housewife. They are heavy and cumbersome; yet housewives will travel miles to procure them, alleging will tug them home if they pass by that way, and at the big Indian religious fairs one sees a pile of grindstones, currystones, pestles and mortars, hailing from Agra, Aligarh, and Jaypote.

Why Some Wives Have Thoughts of Murder

"These eggs don't taste as fresh as they might, dear. Where did you get them?" . . . Why do you have the gas burning so high? Look at that—what was our gas bill last month, anyway? . . . I wonder if we could not have lunch promptly at 12 today, Ethel? . . . Where on earth is my ring? I left it here on the piano last night. . . . What did you have the gateleg table over in the corner for? . . . That picture is all right where it is. What's the difference whether it is over the piano or the marble-top table? Besides, the wall is already so full of nail holes that it looks like a cribbage board. . . . Don't you think you're better let up on that candor, Magnolia? Remember that you gained a couple of pounds last week? . . . I'll bet that with a month's practice I could do all the housework that is done around here in less than two hours a day. . . . This is the fifth accident we've had with the new car, and every one of them has occurred with you at the wheel—and every one of them has been the other fellow's fault. Remarkable?"—Kansas Industrialist.

Value of Timidity

Anatole France, in his younger days, found it profitable to assume a pose of timidity. Once before starting on a lecture tour, he said to his press agent:

"I want you to work up a reputation for me. I don't know that I am particularly timid, but I should like to be thought so. A timid man can do anything. If he is silent when he ought to speak, people say, 'How charming! He's so timid, you know.' If he speaks when he should be silent, they set it down to nervousness. A timid man can do so much with impunity. So please tell all the people in advance that I am timid."

Dr. Julius Klein says Britain is gaining economic strength.

A Pleasant Zephyr From Sunshine Land

To the Enterprise comes a welcome zephyr, from Zephyrhills, Fla. It reads as follows:

To the Editor of Enterprise, Farmington, Mich.
Enclosed please find check for $1.50 subscription for one year, dated February 1, 1930.

The Enterprise is like a letter from home which we are pleased to get. We have been taking it most of the time since Ed. Bloomer started it.

Respectfully,
L. N. Howard,
Zephyrhills, Fla.

The Enterprise hopes Mr. Howard will continue "taking it" for many years to come.

Novi Notes
