WHERE THE JUDGE WAS WRONG

The principle of freedom of the press won an important victory when an appellate court in Ohio set aside the conviction of the editor and an editorial writer of the Cleveland Press for contempt of court because that newspaper had criticized a judge for granting an injunction restraining a sheriff from interfering with a race track gambling.

The court held that the editorial was not in contempt because it did not interfere in a pending case, nor interfere with the court. The decision declared in effect that a judge is not sacrosanct. "If he can set himself above the rest of mankind and sit in judgment on grievances in which he is the injured party," said the court, "we are establishing a dangerous precedent."

It is a general and well-established rule of journalism that the decision of a court shall not be criticized unless it clearly contravenes a constitutional right. This is not through fear of contempt proceedings, but because of a conviction that the courts should be upheld in the interests of organized society. If an elected judge commits acts which shock the general sense of justice the people can be depended on to refuse to re-elect him.

But when a judge attacks a right guaranteed by Federal and State Constitution it is the duty of a newspaper to protest, for the court is a creature of the Constitution, and the Constitution is superior to all courts. The decision of the Ohio court of appeal is a complete vindication of the right of a newspaper to criticize a judge under such circumstances.—Detroit News.

THE TEMPERED BLADE

The man in old age is like a sword in a shop window. Men that look upon the perfect blade do not imagine the process by which it was completed. Man is a sword, daily. Life is the work-shed, and God is the artificer; and those cares which beat upon the anvil, and file the edge, and heat in acid-like the inscription upon his hill—these are the very things that fashion the man.—Beecher.

1930 AS GOOD YEAR

William E. Robb, secretary and manager of the Citizens' Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., a company of over 60,000 policyholders, looks forward to 1930 as a successful year. Through his business connections, he has watched the rapid development of the automobile business during the past 15 years. From the report of agencies during the past two months, which shows an increase over business a year ago, he feels that it is very encouraging for the stability of the automobile business.

"The automobile has become a necessity for transportation and the public seems to be greatly interested in the new models now on display," he said. "I believe that the prospect for new sales for the year is very encouraging and that the dealers in various parts of the state are looking forward to a successful year."

"With an increase in automobiles registered each year and greater congestion, every sensible man will keep insured and use greater care to follow out the rules of safety."

Olin Russell is Farmington representative of the Citizens' Mutual Company.
