Senatorial courtesy is something well understood but difficult to define. One authority defined it as indulgencies extended by one senator to another. Another suggests that the term "senatorial courtesy" is one applied to a custom in the United States senate by which the procedure of that body is based, chiefly, on the honor of senators rather than upon strict rules. For example, it is customary (usually) when a former senator's name is sent in for the nomination for some appointive position to confirm him as a matter of course, without going through the regular routine. It is also customary for the senate to refuse to confirm the nomination of an appointment to office in any state where senators or members object to the person nominated, on the ground that the nomination is personally objectionable.
