Famous In a Day
but the reward of ten years' effort

In 1793 Robert Fulton conceived an idea and worked on it for ten long years. Then, when he amazed the natives of Paris by making his boat cut through the water without the aid of a sail, he became famous "overnight." Four years later, in August, 1807, he inaugurated steamship navigation when his "Clermont" steamed up the Hudson River. While Fulton became famous "overnight," in reality it was the result of ten years' preparation.

It's that way with the attainment of most any goal—preparation paves the way. There is no more practical preparation than the building of a reserve fund here. Your account becomes an investment earning interest and also carries with it the cooperation of this friendly institution, known for its strength and far-flung influence.
