MISSING THE MORNING

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHEN you breakfast at six and you labor at seven, Then you know about earth and you learn about heaven. I gave me every star, and the sun is my neighbor; One has silvered my path, one has gilded my labor. For what know you of air, if you never have taken Just a breath of the dawn, when the grasses awaken? Or what know you of skies, if you never have seen them With their blues and their reds, and their purples between them? Now we're staying up late, and we're getting up later, And we're missing the morn, and a thousand things greater Than your poor little toys and our cheap little pleasures, And are cheating the soul of the most of its treasures. I have walked to my work when the dew was a-dripping, I have heard a bird sing, and have watched a white lily listen, And whatever his wealth, and what titles adorning, How I pity the man who is missing the mornin'!

Why We Do What We Do

by M. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE HAVE IMAGINATION

IMAGINATION is one of the greatest of all human traits. It serves the purpose of amusement and pastime. We love the weird, the fanciful, the ridiculous and absurd, the romantic, art, literature, magic, and the rest of the things which furnish amusement for the mind and relaxation for the body.

The trouble with most of us is that we do not have enough imagination. Imagination is not only a useful toy, but it also serves us in making discoveries and inventions, in looking ahead and planning the future. In building castles on the earth as well as in the air.

Imagination is like a moving picture machine. It projects one's hopes and desires and plans and purposes on the screen of the future. If we do not like the sight of ourself in the new situation we change the picture.

The greatest service of imagination is to help us to foresee the consequences of our acts. The criminal suffers from lack of imagination. He is not so wicked as he is misapprehended, not just, but he has not vivid enough imagination to get him.

We cannot imagine something we have never experienced. Try to picture creatures hobnobbing Mars. We will find that no matter how absurd the creatures of our imagination they nevertheless possess parts that are familiar to us. For example, we can easily imagine a mermaid, half girl and half fish. No one has ever seen such a creature but the two parts that make up this fanciful creature are well known. All that the imagination does is to put old elements into new combinations and new forms.

The scientist needs his imagination to arrive at a new truth by means of piecing together all the known facts. The architect must have imagination enough to see the cathedral aglow in the eye of his mind or skyscraper in the eye of his mind before he can give it expression in brick and steel. We all need imagination to shape our destiny through work and play.
