Announcing a display of the New Ford De Luxe Bodies

We will have on display next week several of the new De Luxe Bodies that have been especially designed for the Ford car.

The Ford Motor Company has made available to the public a complete line of De Luxe Bodies that have been designed for those who desire something different in appearance—appointments and colors—and yet who want the outstanding performance, reliability and economy of the Ford car. The De Luxe types are in addition to the Standard line and consist of Town Sedan, De Luxe Sedan, De Luxe Coupe, Cabriolet, De Luxe Phaeton and De Luxe Roadster.

These cars, while luxuriously appointed, are still kept low in price in accordance with the usual Ford policy.

Visit our showrooms any time next week between 9 a. m. and 9 p. m. and see the beautiful new De Luxe bodies on display.

Our Shining Saucepans

In the descriptions of old-time kitchens, met within fiction and folk stories, there is always a "row of shining pans" reflecting the rosy, beaming face of the cook! Generally these are copper saucepans, and their reddish glow fills those of us who love the gleam of copper with a pang of yearning. But copper is not a practicable material for the less sturdy housewives of today. It is very soft and must be lined with a heavy coating of some better-wearing metal, which also will not affect food chemically as copper is said to do. So we must content ourselves with snowy porcelain or silvery aluminum.

These present-day utensils, however, can be kept a "shining row" if they are polished and cared for as assiduously as the old-time housekeepers cared for their copper. Aluminum especially has its own particular cleansers and metallic sponges, and by following the instructions given with these polishes one may always have clear silver-gray saucepans, ten-ten double boilers, and cooking spoons.

A very efficient housekeeper told me recently that one should not scour thin aluminum saucepans too vigorously or too often. Very good little saucepans can be secured now for ten cents each, but they must be handled gently, as she handles them easily and too hard rubbing will soon wear them through. If a metallic sponge is used on them, it should be wielded very skilfully. Never use ammonia or washing soda on an aluminum utensil.

Steel and iron skillets, on the contrary, may be kept smoothly clean by boiling a half-teaspoon of washing soda in them. Every trace of grease is dissolved and vanishes down the sink; and this bath of boiling soda-water is the best thing in the world for the drain pipe of the sink as well. Tin is totally out of it, as a cooking container. It blackens quickly, and gets out of shape. Gray enamel or granite are within reach now of the slimmest purse, and these materials are easily cleaned, so that our "shining row" may be maintained by a little daily care.

The Percal Ladies

By ADELAIDE D. HUFF

was vivid and small and young and poor and happy and winsome and gay. Her total possessions were a dilapidated old four-cylinder car and a spilt of impulsive generosity that was always getting her into trouble. She had bought the old car for $105 and had promptly named it Runalong.

Before Runalong had come into her life Peggy had walked to church every Sunday morning but now she drove to state, blissfully unconscious of the rattle and clatter that Runalong made. On that first Sunday as she progressed rather uneventfully down the street she spied the Misses Fanny and Cora Jones standing at the corner waiting for a street car. They were members of her church and members of that old-fashioned order of perfect old maids; the kind that wears black and white percale dresses with tiny white flowers on them.

"Going to church?" called Peggy gaily as she brought the quivering little car to a halt.

"Well, now that's sweet of you, Peggy," said Miss Fanny as the two settled themselves and the car got once more under way.

Of course Peggy sat beside them in church and shivered a little when her boss who took up the collection gave them a slight interrogatory glance. She did so want to make a good impression on William Walters because, well, because she wanted to. And these old ladies were undoubtedly common.

"Peggy, you ought to be ashamed of yourself," she whispered faintly. "Now, you'll have to make up for that wicked thought somehow."

"Well go to church together next Sunday if you would like to," she told them as she dropped them at their door. And of course they accepted willingly, gladly. Peggy soon found herself saddled with the Misses Jones forever and a day. At last she was nearly frantic. For awhile she thought of neglecting church but she realized that she could not forego the strange happy thrill she got when she saw William Walters kneeling in prayer, devout, humble, utterly unlike his business self as that knew so well in the office.

"It's always so nice to see you here," he would say at the door, "and these are your friends?" So glad to see you.

"He's just being nice," Peggy told herself, "because I'm a member of the church. He says the same things to everybody."

It was one Saturday night not long afterward that Peggy was sitting in the swing on her little front porch dreading the coming Sunday morning when her telephone rang and her heart stood still when she recognized Walter's voice as it came over the wire.

"May I run over a few minutes?" he asked. "Got some important matters to talk over with you about the business."

"Sure," answered Peggy warmly. "I'll be right here waiting for you."

Quickly she hung up the receiver and rushed upstairs to change her dress and powder her nose. "Now, what could he want?" she wondered. "Am I going to lose my job? Gracious, my hands are so cold. I must keep calm. If he were to find out how I feel about him I'd—I'd simply die!"

The slamming of an automobile door, the quick ringing of the doorbell and Peggy flew downstairs, her eyes shining and her face aglow.

"Heaven! You do look sweet tonight," he exclaimed, as they found a seat in the old swing. "Well, the home office has ordered me to San Francisco to open a branch there," he told her as soon as they were seated.

"Oh," said Peggy with a quick cry of pain, "then I'm going to lose my nice boss. Please don't go. Can't you stay?"

"Would you really care?" he asked, trying to read her face in the half light. "You know, Peggy, I'm not joking and I'm afraid you are nice to everybody. You talk as if I really meant something to you and I don't dare believe this is true."

"But it is true, it is true. You just mean everything to me." Peggy clasped and unclasped her hands in her earnestness as she sat tensely beside him trying to make him believe. Then suddenly she laughed.

But the expression on Walter's well chiseled face remained serious. "Then Peggy, if you aren't just playing with me how would you like to go out there with me as—my wife?"

"I'd—I'd absolutely love it," said Peggy frankly, and a moment later the boss was taking her in his arms, kissing her, whispering words of love to her.

Peggy was sure she was dreaming. She had so often pictured this little scene in her very most private thoughts. Then she knew for certain that it was all actually happening for Walters was saying something that she had never imagined in her life:

"I've loved you ever since the first day I saw you walking in with those absurd, common old maids. I said to myself then and there, 'That's the girl for me. There's genuineness about her and goodness, too.'"

After that Peggy took the Misses Jones to church twice every Sunday and to the "movies" two or three times a week, that is, until she left for California as the bride of Mr. Walters.

Free Movies To Be Continued Each Week

The free movies which have been shown each Saturday night throughout the summer in Farmington Town Hall park will be continued indefinitely, it was decided this week by Farmington merchants sponsoring the programs. The motion pictures will be shown inside the hall when colder weather makes it advisable.

Although the arrangement for the free pictures was planned only for the summer months, the idea has proved so popular that the business-men decided to carry on the program as long as the demand continues.

Farmington Boy Named Honor Group Member

Ross Van Volkenburgh, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Van Volkenburgh, of Farmington, has been notified of his selection for membership in the League of Curtis Salesmen, an honor organization maintained by The Curtis Publication Company for boys who sell its publications.

Admittance to this organization depends upon regular school attendance and a record of efficient service to customers. Through this training, teachers generally report that boys gain a sense of responsibility that tends to make schooling more real to them.

Ross's friends say he is developing a sense of self confidence and an ability to make decisions quickly, which is one reason why he is proud to show his badge of membership to his friends and is now looking forward to advancement to the next higher degree in the organization. He has accomplished this in one year, upon which he is being congratulated.
