Lesson That It Pays to Be Kind and Courteous Is Something to Be Remembered.

MEANS MUCH IN BUSINESS

Story Recently Published Contains Sermon on the Matter—Boorish-ness Never Yet Has Paid Dividends and Courtesy Always Does.

One of the most important lessons in the home and at school which our grandparents were compelled to learn pertained to kindness and courteousness to all with whom they might associate, especially their siders. When they were children our grandfathers "doffed their caps" the course of the course of the course of their siders. When they were children our grandfathers "doffed their caps" the course of their siders, and the pleasure of their playfellows. Some children are still taught manners of this kind, but the great majority of American children are really encouraged to be selfah, disregardful, unkind and discourteous. An aged lady died in a fully in Ohlo. An aged and died in a fully in Ohlo. That will use a serome regarding kindness and courteousness. It said that in these days when both young and old sought first their own comforts and pleasures, it was exceptional to find a person who was truly solicitous for the happiness of other people. Such a person had been of great services to the decedent, who bequeathed her the major portion of her solicitous for the happiness of other people. Such a person had been of great services to the decedent, who bequeathed her the major portion of her solicitous for the happiness of other explained to the relatives that he had drawn it much against his own whose, set could not but admire the determination of the deceased to reward a young woman who had been kind to her on an occasion when she most needed kindness. He then told them that nearly all her money.

This story is taken from a recent paper, and has already been the could held the compelled to ride in an upper berthe having all been taken, the best she could do was to obtain an "upper." When she entered the cor, she found ryoung lady seated in the seat opposite, who when she found that the aged woman would be compelled to ride in an upper berthe she will have a solicitude of younger people for the comfort and happiness of their elders. It is here repeated because it om phasiase the point that two with to comfort and respect be mannly or womanly unless their relations with others, especially their olders, is characterized by kindness and courteousness. They should ness and courteousness. They should ness and courteousness. They should ness and courteousness that the sease it is right to be no. The young lady mentioned above had not hought of reward, but she possessed kindness of heart and courteousness of manner, graces of greater import than beauty, carriage or accomplishment of any kind.

Means Access of Care.

Hurry of mind, is the form in which it attacks the strong man, is in one sense a tribute to capacity. It comes of the claims of work, and it comes from without. It is part of the temptation to anxiety and burdening care against which. Jeaus warned his followers—Take no anxious thought:—that is a call to the self-mastery which is only won by faith. He would be the list to deny that work is often hard, that claims on time and strength crowd in, as the multitude often througed him, that the night brings weariness. But the help he does not work alone. His is the message of the father who concerns himself with our endeavors and cares for our needs. That faith is a touchstone of the claims that urge themselves upon us. It is a secret of that rest of heart which keeps us from disturbance when all is turnoll and confusion round about. His was the example of the effective life that showed no trace of hurry or anxiety. That is the paradox of the faith, that the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace is the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace is the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace is the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace is the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that leads to case and peace in the way of selimatery that the way

Nothing in Hurry of Mind:

Hurry of mind in this lower sense is the state in which many people always with to live. They crave it as the opium smoker craves bit drug. To be distracted all day long with the company of the distracted all day long with always something to bridge over the time between darkness and sleep, is the apparent wish of many a man. There is no depth, either of meaning or enloyment fin such lives. You have seen them at some show, moving from point to point with staring eyes and open mouths, seeking excitement. You have seen them railroading through Europe land giving three minutes to masterpleces that summed up the company of the more rate of the more rate of the more rate of them controlled in which the clear stores deal. That real and hasting enjoyment can only be the fruit of deliberato attention followed by careful thought, is a tryth they seem incapable of grasping.

Do you fit the job too well?

That may sound like a foolisi question, but there are hundreds of workers who literally fit their jobs too well. When they do not advance as they would like they wonder why, but they never by any change guess the forecasse, the men who do not fit their jobs well enough outsumber the men who dit too well, the latter have been ignored. Their problem, however, is an important one.

The man who is prefectly satisfied with his job is the man who fits too well. He may have achieved his position by hard work and by fathful application or he may have received it by a "graft," but if he is too well successful the graft of the successful the successful
