An Inexpensive Favor COMBINING the practical with the novel and beautiful, the hostess may surprise her feminine guests with this bouquet made of the small articles every woman needs.

The small paper dollies used in ice cream service are made the base of the bouquet. The rest of the items may be purchased at the local variety stores. Spread next to the paper are ten artificial leaves with their stems running through the center of the paper to form the bouquet holder.

A deep rose ruffle of crepe paper is next sewed to the leaves. A spool of thread is wound in a lighter shade of rose paper. A tumbler is also covered in this shade. A paper of books and eyes is rolled into a pale green shade of crepe paper cut like a polka-dot. Lingerie tape, black pins, a rolled package of needles and a few colorful pieces of fabric are likewise partially covered with pale rose-colored crepe paper.

At first glance the favor looks like a bunch of small flowers.

Cyprus Land of Delites Cyprus is about 3,684 square miles and is the largest island of the Mediterranean except Sicily and Sardinia. In the olden days it was an abode of the Greek deities. There the gods and goddesses of old Greek home and fought. Astarte, Aphrodite, Venus, or whatever you are accustomed to call the goddess of love, fruitfulness, beauty, and their attendant misfortunes, were worshipped there.

Most of the immortal great and many of the mortal of ancient Greece have been in Cyprus. Waves of history have swept over it, each leaving a little sediment behind.
