Aurelius Smith's Neat Ruse

By R. T. M. SCOTT

(Copyright.)

BOLLINGWORTH'S proxy was a valuable document. It would be worth millions at a board meeting in New York on the following day. Jeffries and Sanderson motored out to Bollingworth's country house on Long Island to argue against each other for the document but, of course, they did not travel in the same car. Fat old Jeffries took Aurelius Smith along with him to safeguard a valuable paper. If he obtained it, up to the minute that it would be voted on the next day, Smith traveled ostensibly as Jeffries' friend and not as a private detective.

"I'll get the paper and you will keep it," rumbled and chuckled old Jeffries. "Together we'll lick Sanderson and his dirty crew."

As the two entered the big country house, a feminine shriek rang out and Smith's long legs carried him up a flight of stairs without their customary indolence. In a back room he found a very pretty maid with her foot caught in a steel trap. He wrenched the jaws apart and held her ankle for a few moments while she writhed in pain.

The business meeting occurred in the music room on the ground floor. It had to be short as Bollingworth was leaving by plane within an hour on his way to California. There was nothing immediately for Smith to do. He shook hands with Bollingworth and Sanderson and got their names mixed as deaf people do—or stupid people, or people too lazy to think much. Few people could believe that so indolent a man was observing everything with photographic accuracy.

While the three men gathered around a table, Smith wandered to the piano and ran his fingers over the keys but stopped quickly so as not to interfere with the conversation.

At the end of an hour Bollingworth signed a paper and Jeffries had won. Bollingworth left the house at once after ordering luncheon to be served to his three guests. The proxy lay upon the table beside a heavy blue envelope. Jeffries inserted it in the envelope and sealed the flap.

At that moment the roar of a plane sounded outside. Jeffries snatched the envelope on the table and turned toward the window. Sanderson looked away also. The roar of the plane became louder and all three men walked to the window near the piano. Smith and Jeffries approached the window in advance of Sanderson. When they returned to the table the envelope was gone. There were other blue envelopes in a rack on the table but they were all empty.

Sanderson laughed indignantly and offered to let Jeffries search him. The offer was accepted and Jeffries found nothing, but Smith had wandered to the piano and was again running his fingers over the keys while he frowned as if trying to think. Suddenly he turned around on the piano bench as if an idea had at last been born and said that he ought to have told Jeffries that the maid hid put an antiseptic on her foot so that she would not be poisoned by the rat trap.

"I didn't bring you out here to fiddle with maids' ankles," grumbled Jeffries. "Bollingworth is in the air and we can't get another proxy. We are dashed."

Smith rang the bell. The butler summoned the injured maid who limped to Smith and talked in low tones with him while she secretly received a ten dollar bill. The maid limped out of the room and shortly returned, after which Smith joined Jeffries and Sanderson in the hall where Jeffries had ordered his car.

"I can't understand you, Smith," said Jeffries as the two walked toward the front door, leaving Sanderson behind.

"Have just a little patience," returned Smith softly and opened the door to speak to Jeffries' chauffeur. Jeffries looked his astonishment as the car roared off. The two stood for a few moments in the doorway. Jeffries too surprised to speak. Suddenly a yell sounded inside the house. "Come on!" called Smith as he dashed back to the music room.

Beside the piano stood Sanderson with the rat trap dangling from his hand while he cursed. Blood was dripping from his hand to the floor.

"I knew that he must have taken the envelope from the table," explained Smith, "but I did not know where he had put it until I touched the piano keys the second time and found that three strings were dead. He stole quite close to the piano when we looked out the window."

Sanderson, desperately helpless, let Smith pry the trap from his hand. "The maid brought me the trap," continued Smith, "and I placed it on the strings, under which he had slipped the envelope, and covered it with my handkerchief."

Then it was that Sanderson struggled to turn defeat into victory. He reached into the piano and snatched out the blue envelope.

Jeffries started toward the madened man but Smith pulled him back.

"I substituted an empty envelope when the two of you first turned toward the window," he said. "The proxy has been in my pocket all the time."

LEGION AUXILIARY HOLDS MEETING; TO AID VETERANS

Women Send Christmas Articles To War Veterans Still In Hospitals

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Groves-Walker Post No. 346, held their December meeting at the home of Isabelle Lueke, Monday, night, December 8. Committees were appointed to attend to the Christmas program. The winter package of bathrobes, pajamas and bedroom slippers were mailed to the American Legion Hospital at Battle Creek. Checks for $30.00 were sent to buy gifts and fruit for the Billist children at Otter Lake and the soldiers at the two Battle Creek hospitals.

After the meeting a social hour was enjoyed by all. Bunco was played, prizes given and refreshments served by the hostess.

Aiding to carry on the great task of caring for the World War disabled, who still fill the government hospitals to the number of more than 25,000, and of whom other thousands are still struggling to regain a place in civil life is one of their endeavors of the Auxiliary. It gives a cheery Christmas to all the veterans who are confined to the hospitals on that day and it brightens homes which otherwise would have to count their Christmas as part of the war's sacrifice.

—I. Lueke, Historian.

EXPECT BETTER TIMES FOR FLOCK OWNERS

East Lansing—An increased consumption of lamb and a decrease in the stocks of mutton held in cold storage are encouraging factors pointed out by the apimal husbandry division of Michigan State College in a survey of the future prospects for Michigan shepherds.

A higher wool tariff is expected to help the domestic market for wool and one of the large woolen mills reports a 25 per cent increase in business over last year. Imports of wool into the United States during the last six months of 1930 were 25,000,000 pounds less than for the corresponding months in 1929.

DETERMINE WORTH

Ann Arbor.—Determining whether or not a prospective student is justified in spending time and money to acquire a college education, or whether it would be better for him and the University not to make the attempt, is a leading feature of modern educational research. Comparison of pre-college tests and ratings with first semester college records indicate that such predictions may in the future be made with greater certainty than at present as scientific methods are improved, states Dr. Clarence S. Yoakum, vice-president in charge of educational research at the University of Michigan.

URGES EARLY PAYMENT OF CHRISTMAS SEALS

An appeal for replies to letters as yet unanswered in the Christmas seal sale is made by Dr. B. A. Shepard, president of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association.

While urging early payment for the seals on the part of those able to do so, Dr. Shepard states that persons who wish to buy seals but are unable to pay for them at present are welcome to use them on their Christmas gifts and letters, making payment as soon after Christmas as possible.

TAKES NATIONAL AWARD

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Halogens, those chemicals known popularly as iodine and bromine in medicine, and chlorine of war gas fame, have frequently been a trial name for the analytical chemist because of the inconvenience, difficulty and danger involved in determining the quantity present in a compound. Now, through the work of Joseph J. Thompson and Urban O. Oakdale, two young graduate students of chemistry at the University of Michigan, a method of analysis has been perfected which makes it easy for chemists and pharmacists to learn quickly the quantity of these commonly used substances in any compound.

The young scientists were pleasantly surprised to learn that their work had been honored by the award given by the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association for the most important contribution to manufacturing pharmacy.
