Now Doctor In West

Benjamin Greenburg, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Greenburg of Vassar, Mich., is now a licensed medical and surgical doctor in California. Dr. Greenburg is a former resident of Farmington having managed a drug store here for Stanley Smith about eight years ago, and is well known in Farmington.

After he finished high school, Dr. Greenburg entered Ferris Institute where he completed a college preparatory course in 1923. In 1925 he was a member of the graduating class of the Detroit College of Pharmacy and Chemistry where he received two degrees.

After working for a short time as a pharmacist, Dr. Greenburg then left for the West where he began the study of medicine and surgery.

Enterprise Liners bring results

Resort Business Is Aid To Prosperity

The tourist and resort interests of Michigan, reviewing the progress of this industry over a period of five years, claim that the growing influx of summer visitors reflects prosperity on practically all of the state's industries.

In the upper peninsula, the average earning capacity of each resident is increased, directly or indirectly by $32.50 per annum because of the tourist trade, according to figures compiled by the Upper Peninsula Development Bureau. An even larger figure is computed for the remainder of the state.

That this business is solving, to some extent at least, Michigan's idle land problem is shown by the fact that today more than 600,000 acres of such lands are held for their recreational value by private interests.

blanket on the frozen ground and laid down and soon slept the sleep of exhaustion.

About 4:00 the next morning—the 22nd—we were aroused by the bugle call and the roll of drums. We had camped on the banks of the Kentucky river. We crossed through a covered, wooden bridge at daylight, and began again the weary tramp. About 2:00 p. m. we struck the Johnnies and began a running fight, driving them through Danville, 38 miles south of Lexington. There we again went into camp about 4:00 o'clock.

Fired Upon

While some of the comrades were building fires, I went with others into a nearby corn field to gather corn stalks on which to lay our blankets, but sharp picket-firing and the long roll of drums sent us back. Hurrying on our accompaniments the sharp command of "Fall into line, fall into line" robbed us of the chance for hot coffee, and we began a slow retreat through the town. How those Reb women grieved!

Stopping occasionally to form across the road between the stone fences, we held the Johnnies in check while the mule teams were hurrying ahead of us. The Rebs had been re-informed and now outnumbered us two to one.

At midnight we reached the river and halted to rest on the wooden bridge. We had marched since daylight, thirty eight miles. Here I made a big mistake and came near paying dearly. Thinking I could lie down and get a little rest, I crawled over the railing and lay down on a big beam and fell asleep. The regiment had gone only a short distance before I was missed. John Sherman of Southfield, hurried back and yanked over the railing just as the last of the cavalry were crossing. We soon reached the regiment, and what a cussing I got.

Return Trip

We reached Nicholasville about noon and were met there by reinforcements, and then plodded along slowly reaching Lexington at 4:00. We still had two miles to go. We reached camp at dark. Some of the comrades were too tired to remove their accoutrements and lay down as they could get into their tents.

However, I took mine off and my older brother, who had not made the raid, soon brought me hot coffee and cooked rations. This was Wednesday night. We had marched over 80 miles since Monday morning. Three days without eating anything but hard tack and pork, carried in our haversacks, and not a cup of coffee, the soldiers maintain.

All of my Farmington comrades have passed away. But some of their children are living and these lines may tell them of the brave fight their fathers made those long three years to save the Union. I know of only one, Mrs. Clyde Chamberlain and one school mate of mine, Mrs. Elliott Sprague, whose brave brother, Lyman Heath later fell at Chickamauga.

NINE MILLION VISIT*STATE PARKS IN 1930

Lansing.—The nine million people who visited Michigan state parks last year travelled 150,000,000 miles on Michigan highways between their homes and the various parks, according to the calculators of the state parks division of the Department of Conservation.

The mileage is based on the assumption that the average automobile carrying three people, made an average trip of fifty miles between home and park.

Further computation shows that this travel must have caused a gasoline bill of about $2,000,000 and a gas tax of four hundred thousand dollars paid into the State highway fund available for the maintenance of construction of State and County highways.

The legislative appropriation for park maintenance and operation during the same year was $197,775.00.

FARMINGTON HAS NEW PHONE CABLE

Farmington and Detroit are now connected by a storm proof long distance cable containing more than 375 pairs of wires, according to Roy E. Crowe, manager of the Michigan Bell Telephone company in this area, who states that approximately $65,000 has been spent this year in bringing about the improvement and providing to meet the increasing need for service between the two points. Construction of the enlarged telephone highway was started last spring, the work continuing through the summer and fall. Crews of telephone linemen are dismantling the old line that formerly served.

The new cable provides an increased number of circuits and improved voice transmission, and brings Farmington into the group of Michigan cities that are connected by the trans-Michigan long distance telephone cable system. The trans-Michigan cable, building of which was started in 1921, now connects all of the principal cities in the eastern, central and western sections of the southern peninsula and has cost, to date, more than $11,300,000.

The Farmington-Detroit cable runs from the local central office to the Inkster road where it connects with the cable to the Detroit long distance office in the Bell Telephone building, 1365 Cass avenue. The Farmington section is approximately 21,000 feet in length.
