B ILLT MILES lived away up in the backwoods country of Mainer; he and his widowed mother. The farm was not particularly productive; but they managed to ske out a searty illuge, enough for necessities, from their large timber holdings, selling cordwood and now and then white pine on the stump to an elightorism of your cord of the stump to a neighborism strong the stump to a neighborism strong to the stump to the stump to the stump to most of the stump to most of the strong to the stump to the stump her more than she was willing to ad-mit. As for Billy, he silently wor-shiped her; frankly facing, however, the undenlable fact that for him, a penniless backwoodsman, to aspire to the hand of a New York debutante was about the most ridiculous thing in the world.

was about the most ridiculous thing in the world.
But often there would finds in his mind the picture of Herviles, cleaning the Adgean stables successfully. Nothing was impossible IIB stater's last words came back to him frequently these days: "work and study hard—keep clean—and some day you may be piesannly surprised. So filly never let the stender shaft of light that we call Hope fileker out within him.

that we can now increase our anama him.

Virginia and Billy played about; fished and a swam together all that summer until the day came for the departure of the Valley family. Billy sought out Mr. Valley, a notable New York lawyer.

acquartum of the Valley Zamily, Elliy sought out Mr. Valley, a notable New York is very compared for my mother to be in town for a year at least 1 vant to be a lawyer. Haven't you some sort of job in your farmil could have while I'm studying nights and all spare time?" Rudoif Valley wasted no words. I't think I have, young man. I like your girl. Here's my card, Come in as soon as you get in toyan. And that was Bliry's wife step up. And that was Bliry's wife step up. And that was Bliry's life to which involved general research, while the yet studied to it himself for a ciert-ship. Bliry literally ate work. He was incomitable; for he had vowed he would be a member of the bar in free years.

That year Bliry seldom saw Virginia, except when she stooped at his dear for a smilling "Hello, there" on her way out from her father's office. But her face was the shining torch toward which he strove, She it was hondram, the lived her life of mahanche lived her. We have the day Rudoid Shelly was sanctum and said!

Then the great day, the day Rudoid Valley called Bliry into his private sanctum and said:

"Yeal, atto you to read that clipping and agan this paper, Bliry."
Bliry fingered the tiny clipping. "Next of kin to William A. Milley Please communicate Blainsk; solid-ions; London."
"Well, atto Bliry's volced puzzled. "Well, atto Bliry's volced puzzled."
