

BROOKLYN'S OLDEST CENTRAL OFFICE GOES DIAL

The oldest telephone central office in Brooklyn, N. Y., was changed over to dial operation not long ago. It is known as Main 4, and has a history dating back to 1850. It began its career of service after Brooklyn's first telephone line, connecting the plant of J. L. Haigh and his office on John Street, Manhattan, had been strung over the then unfinished Brooklyn Bridge. The exchange first bore the name of Brooklyn, but was known as Main 4 in 1889 and now is changed to Main 4.

LINE PLANNED TO CONNECT INDIAN CITIES

The Telephone Administration in India is considering the construction of a line between Calcutta and Raipur. If the project is carried out, it will complete a program begun ten years ago to provide a telephone network connecting the principal cities of India. At the same time, the total wire mileage of long distance circuits in the country amounted to 4,100 miles. Today it figures up to about 21,000 miles.
