

Metro Airport Uses Diesel Snowblower

When a snowstorm hits, it can cover an airport in a hurry; with high winds behind it, big drifts could threaten to close air operations altogether. Metropolitan Airport is but one of many airports that faces a massive runway clearing job in winter. With more than 1200 scheduled flights every day, Metropolitan cannot permit weather to interfere with traffic.

The huge facility contains 4,300 acres of land and approximately 8 1/2 miles of prime runway. Snow removal is no easy job.

Metro employs the use of one of the world's largest snow removal machines, the Roel-Belback High Speed 300 Snowblower. Capable of moving 3,000 tons of snow an hour at speeds of up to 35 miles per hour, the snowblower provides the punch needed to effectively clear the prime runways for incoming traffic.

The machine is equipped with two 52-inch diameter impellers and two pre-cutter props which are driven by a 318 HP, 6V-71N Detroit Diesel engine. The big snowblower has a 5V-53N Detroit Diesel engine for drive power. It can cut a swath of snow from 9 to 16 feet wide with ease.

Wet, dry, drifted or packed snow makes no difference to the machine. Equipped with a three-speed transmission with ratios of 1.00, 1.45 and 2.16
