CONVALESCING INSTALLER SAVES FRIEND FROM DEATH

Convalescing from a head injury and with even a swim tabooed by the doctor, Adam Reiser, telephone installer, sat on the beach at Singac, N. J., on the banks of the Passaic River the other afternoon, watching his best friend, Alphonse Mosca, an expert swimmer, enjoying himself in the water.

Suddenly, in mid-stream, Mosca raised his voice in a frantic call for help. Reiser raced to the water, jumped in, succeeded in saving the other man just as he was going down. He brought the man to shore unconscious, and applied first aid methods, which telephone employees are taught throughout the Bell System. When the doctor arrived the rescuer was all in, but Mosca was out of danger.

"That fellow certainly took a chance with his life," was the doctor's comment.

"Mosca is my friend," was Reiser's reply.
