SWISS OPERATORS MUST BE FLUENT IN THREE TONGUES

Switzerland has three national languages: German, French and Italian. As a result telephone operators in Switzerland must be able to use any one of the three. The majority of the Swiss cantons are German speaking, and therefore the German language is used to a greater extent than the others in telephone conversations.

Local and long distance calls in Switzerland are showing considerable increase, as are also calls between Switzerland and foreign countries, and international calls passing through Switzerland. Transatlantic telephone service was extended to Switzerland in July, 1928. The service is used extensively, not only by tourists, but also for business purposes.
