"A Permanent Journal Of Progress"

On November 2, 1888, The Farmington Enterprise was founded by Edgar R. Bloomer who, with subsequent publishers, ever strived to make this newspaper "A Permanent Journal of Progress." This is No. 52 of Volume 43

1888

The Farmington Enterprise has been "A Permanent Journal of Progress." Between the covers of dust laden files is recorded the history of Farmington. Not just a collection of dry documents setting forth chronologically the events of Farmington's history, political and economic, but rather one of human beings, the people of Farmington, Farmington's institutions, its ambitions, its sorrows, its joys and its achievements.

1931

From week to week additions are made to this invaluable record. Farmington's citizens of today are adding their own bit to the progress and achievement of the past. It is an ever-ending story, but it is complete, authentic and human.

To the faithful recording of this story, Farmington's "Permanent Journal of Progress" is dedicated.
