Brilliant Spotlight Fails To 'Burn' Mayor

Still More!

To complete the "out" of "the opposition," two columns further over was the detailed story of the session, repeating that "By this move the county will save a substantial sum in salaries, besides securing the services of trained executives to direct the handling of the county's poor relief." One change was made in the selection of the three successors to the commissioners.

Tells Reason

Mayor Lamb Monday night at the City Commission meeting related the proceedings of the board and outlined his views. He declared he was certain that the three men chosen would not duplicate the work of the commissioners, but would simply hire some "big-old" year man" and supervise his work in a general way. The result, he said, would be that one man would be drawing what three men did before. Further he said the three Oakland County commissioners had the solid support of the State body, and were regarded by State welfare heads as one of the most capable and efficient poor commissions in the entire State.

Amplifying his statements, Mayor Lamb said that he was unwilling to cast a vote declaring a man incompetent when he did not believe him to be so, and without charges made, merely to accomplish a purpose which could not be brought about in any other way.

As to the charge that he "led the group in opposition" Mayor Lamb said it was untrue, because there was not time enough to organize any opposition.

"Change Minds"

Supervisor Arthur P. Coe of Farmington Township, who joined Mr. Lamb, Mr. Hamilton and the others in opposing the resolution, expressed sentiments similar to those of Mayor Lamb. He said that he did not believe the new plan would endure, and that he knew of three supervisors who had changed their minds since the voting, having declared that they did not have time to study the matter thoroughly and view it from all angles. Mayor Lamb said that a reporter had warned these three men in advance that they would be censured publicly if they did not vote "yes," and that these supervisors had cast their ballots in the affirmative, only to express regret later.

Mayor Lamb indicated that he believed the plan might work satisfactorily if the three executives chosen could find it possible to handle the work personally. With this in mind he offered a motion that the entire county relief work, including some now handled in various townships by the supervisors, be turned over to the new commissioners. At least one commissioner would be required to sign each poor order issued. The effect of the motion was lost when Supervisor Walter Tripp of Milford offered an amendment to read that the supervisors would co-operate fully with the new commissioners, the amendment being carried.

Congratulated

Mayor Lamb said that on Monday evening he received a number of telephone calls from various parts of the County, congratulating him on his stand. Among them, he said, was a call from one of the outstanding men in public life in the county and this part of the State. He doesn't mind the "censure," he says, and if he did the expressions of approval would more than make up for it.

Incidentally, in between the pictures of Messrs. Lamb and Hamilton on that dazzling front page was an article reporting the appointment of the "Governor's Committee" on unemployment in the County, and Mayor Lamb was named on that. So that the name of "Lamb of Farmington" captured six of the eight columns of the county seat daily newspaper in one day, although the mention in five of them was hostile. But why he and Mr. Hamilton were singled out for "blessing" is still the big puzzle to Farmington's mayor.

AN ULTIMATE CONSUMER

This baby in a drought stricken section of West Virginia was one of the ultimate consumers of the feedstuffs given by the American Red Cross in the past year. More than 2,750,000 persons were fed by the organization.

Fortunate

"I never thought I'd pull through, but I did. First I got angina pectoris, followed by arteriosclerosis. Just as I was recovering from these, I got tuberculosis and double pneumonia. Then they gave me hypodermics. Apparently this gave way to aphasia and hypertrichotic cirrhosis. Afterwards I had diabetes and acute indigestion, besides gastritis, rheumatism, lumbago, and neuritis. I was given morphine."

"Good heavens, you don't look much the worse for it."

"I wasn't fit, you know! I was up for my spelling test in connection with a health department job."

The ten-months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Putman of Novi had a fortunate escape from serious injury or death Tuesday, when she fell down a laundry chute. The little girl was creeping around the kitchen and in some manner the door opened and she fell into the chute, going head-first.

Mrs. Putman heard the baby crying, but could not find her for some time. No bones were broken, but the tot was badly bruised.

Small Tree Saves Car At Edge Of High Cliff

An Essex coach owned by Clarence P. Gilkey, 33325 Shiawassee street, Farmington, came near being demolished Sunday when in some unaccountable manner it started over the steep embankment across the road from the Gilkey home. A small tree less than six inches in diameter caught the bumper and held the car.

Had the machine passed three feet farther east, it would have fallen 40 feet over the embankment to McGee Hill road below, and perhaps 25 feet farther to the creek. The impact with the tree doubled the bumper back against the radiator, but there was no other damage. A wrecker was required to haul the car back up the cliff.

Mr. Gilkey was unable to explain the accident. He had parked the machine just a few minutes before, after having just brought it back from the garage. The fact that the car had to pass over the crown of the road before it could reach the embankment made the occurrence still a greater mystery.

More Than $2,200 Paid On City Water Bills

The payments, according to Mr. Power, compare favorably with those made for other quarters.

Warning Served On Welfare Dependents

A stern warning to all receiving public welfare aid in this vicinity was brought forth this week, when Ed Wright of Clareneville was arraigned before Judge John J. Schulte on a charge of being drunk. Wright's family had been receiving aid.

Supervisor Coe took a hand in the Wright case and declared that if anyone on the welfare list is caught misrepresenting their condition, or getting into difficulty similar to Wright's he will exert every influence to see that punishment is swift and harsh.
