SUGGEST USES FOR FORMER METHODIST CHILDREN'S HOME

Several Proposals For Utilizing Building West Of Farmington Received

Several proposals for utilizing of the former Methodist Children's Home West of Farmington are under consideration, it was reported Wednesday to the Exchange Club by Rev. Floyd Charles Johnson, chairman of a committee named for the purpose.

The first is that of establishment of a home for rehabilitating narcotic addicts, but it is doubtful whether this will be acted upon. It is felt that not only is there some question as to its desirability, but the circumstances are such that it might conflict with the work of local physicians in the way of general hospital work.

Two other ideas have been put forth, but are not yet far enough advanced to be regarded as of great importance.

Farmington Hunters Have Success—Return

Farmington hunters have begun to return from the north with their game. Among the first to return with a deer was Harrison Johnson, Geo. Gildemeister returned Thursday with a buck, and reportedly Harold Case, who accompanied him, had also obtained a deer, but is still at the hunting-place near Rogers City. Eugene Grace is with him, and still a-hunting.

It was reported that the most disappointed man in the State is Olin Russell, who was said to have had a first-class shot at a buck—but something happened. His friends feel that he may bring one home yet.

Property Owners Soon To Learn New Valuations

It is expected that Farmington's tax rolls will be back from the State Tax Commission this week end, when property-owners will have as opportunity to learn what assessments have been placed upon their properties.

At Milford, where tax rolls were received recently, officials designated a public hearing day, during which the rolls were opened to the public for inspection after being returned from the State.

Couple Testify At Trial But Not On Same Side

Villiers, the plaintiff, is employed by Mr. Eichelberger, and sued Mrs. Eichelberger and her brother-in-law, LaPlue, for $297.50 as proceeds of the garden, planted last spring, when Mr. and Mrs. Eichelberger occupied the farm together. He claimed that LaPlue, a resident of Ferndale, and he were to plant and care for the garden together, sharing equally the proceeds, LaPlue having furnished the ground and Villiers the plants. Later, he declared, Mrs. Eichelberger told him that LaPlue had not been working in the garden, and that if he would dress chickens for her and take them to market, he could have the use of the ground in return. When Eichelberger was ousted, he testified, he also was ordered off, and he declared that Mrs. Eichelberger "threatened to shoot me" if I went on the place. He said he watched the harvesting of his crop over the garden fence, and was helpless.

Mrs. Eichelberger, called as an adverse witness, disagreed with Villiers' testimony. She said he had been working in the garden in return for use of a truck, and denied having told him that LaPlue was not entitled to anything from the garden. She also vehemently denied having threatened to shoot Villiers, stating that she had told him to keep off after she found he was coming to the garden at dusk and taking off the garden crops. She testified that the title to the farm is in her name having been given to her as part of a separation agreement made with her husband three years ago. Subsequently the Eichelbergers were reunited, until, she testified, July 23 of this year, when she left the farm for about a week. On her return she started divorce proceedings, and obtained the injunction.

Husband Testifies

Mr. Eichelberger was called to the stand, but before he could testify, Mrs. Eichelberger's attorney, Fred Dye of Redford, objected on the ground that the husband could not testify because it would be against his wife. Villiers' lawyer, LeRoy J. Gilbert of Detroit, agreed to waive any question as to Mrs. Eichelberger's liability, and after a prolonged argument Judge Schulte ruled that he would allow Eichelberger to testify as relating to LaPlue, but not as to Mrs. Eichelberger. Eichelberger's testimony supported Villiers, the witness saying that he was manager of the farm and had full authority until he was "put off by the sheriff."

Neighbor On Stand

Cony Sapienza, machinist who lives on the north side of the farm, testified that he had seen LaPlue take produce from the garden and also sell some of it back of the house.

Nephew Opposes Uncle Russell Plue, nephew of LaPlue also a resident of Ferndale, and employed by Eichelberger, testified that he had helped in the garden until Eichelberger was ousted, but it remained for his brother to give more detailed testimony. Elmer declared that his uncle had worked in the garden very little, and that he had heard Mrs. Eichelberger tell Villiers that he could have the use of the land in return for dressing chickens. He asserted that LaPlue and Villiers were to share equally in the garden and that in addition, the witness and his brother were to work there and get their vegetable needs for winter—one-fourth of Villiers' portion. He and his brother never obtained their share, he testified. The agreement, he said, was made at his uncle's house in Ferndale. The boy's mother followed him on the stand and gave supporting testimony.

One Released Mrs. Eichelberger's attorney then offered a motion that the case be dismissed as to Mrs. Eichelberger, since no evidence had been offered to show any liability on her part. The plaintiff's attorney offered no objection and the motion was granted.

During her testimony, Mrs. Eichelberger offered a list of the proceeds of the garden which differed astonishingly from Villiers' claim. Whereas the plaintiff estimated that the produce had been worth $297.50, the defense declared that only $11.50 was realized from the garden.

Judge Schulte rendered a decision for Villiers against LaPlue in the amount of $144.00, plus $5.25 costs and $5 attorney fees. Notice of appeal to the Circuit Court was filed a few days later.
