Find in Desert Causes Stir Among Scientists

In a sand-filled depression near the ancient Pyramid of Degees, seven miles north of Cairo, Egypt, a woman archaeologist has discovered the Egyptian department of antiquities.

Several stone statues were found in a heap at the top of a large sand-filled depression, some distance from any buildings. Their attributes, cast and attitudes indicate that they are Syrian deities. On the other hand, their workmanship seems to show the hand of an Egyptian sculptor of the Persian or Ptolemaic period. The largest statue represents a fat, seated woman, wearing a high tura. Others represent a man in Chaldean costume, and a woman, both standing in rigid attitudes, with their hands stretched forward, while a man's head with a large beard seems to come from a winged bull.

The rarity of figures of western Asiatic gods gives considerable importance to these finds. The former do not possess historical significance, as they were probably made for one of the foreign colonies which were so numerous at Memphis in the later pre-Christian period, and of which hitherto so little has been known.

Old and New Commingle on Streets of Madeira

Madiera has been aptly termed "The Enchanted Isle" and still deserves this poetic title in spite of a recent land slide which occasioned considerable loss of life and property. Madeira is a land of sun and flowers and blue seas. It has become highly popular as a holiday resort with those of means and leisure. What struck me most about it (writes a correspondent), was the extraordinary survival of customs at least five or six centuries old alongside modern methods and improvements. Up and down the narrow, twisting streets of cobble, patient pairs of bullocks still grown as they stand, loaded with passengers or merchandise, and driven by men or boys in picturesque native costume, while the most modern motor car, and motor buses, carrying natives between Funchal and the villages of the hinterland, whiz past them at a quite incredible pace.

Use of Whales

Practically the entire whale is used for commercial purposes. Whale oil, of course, is the chief product and is used principally at the present time in making soap. Occasionally it is used as a lubricant in combination with mineral oil, and recently a new use has been found for it in an animal oil for making margarine. Little whale oil is now used for heating and lighting purposes. Fresh whale flesh is ground into whale-meat meal for cattle feed, and both the flesh and bones are ground into fertilizer.

Careful Clara

Two South college girls were members of a camping party on one occasion when the question of mushrooms came up.

"Clara," said one of them with reference to the specimens brought in, "these may be good mushrooms all right, but are you sufficiently expert in such matters to know that they are not in reality toadstools?"

"Well," said Clara, "there weren't any toads sitting on them."—Kansas City Times.

Eye for Values

A collector of manuscripts and first editions of early Americana found a sermon in pamphlet form in a second-hand book shop. It was the only known copy of the old sermon except the one which the collector already possessed. He paid $500 for the second copy, took it home with him and threw it into the fireplace. The destruction of the second copy added several times its purchase price to the one the collector originally held, he explained.—Nation's Business.

Roman Carnival Changed

In a general way it can be said that carnival is held just before the beginning of Lent, but it exists no more in its ancient form. In Rome it is now almost wholly limited to masked balls in the theaters and its manifestations in the streets are sparse and very attenuated. On the Riviera, however, there are floats, mainly with flowers, while this aspect of carnival, once so important, has altogether disappeared in Rome.

Animals Well Treated

In Sofia, Bulgaria, animals of burden are protected by laws which are impartially enforced. Only loads of certain size are permitted on wagons and the wagons must be greased regularly so they pull easily. Every animal pulling a burden must be properly shod and drivers are cautioned, to feed them well, keep them treated properly when they are ill. Fowls cannot be carried with heads down, as this is cruel.

Why He Was in Bad

"A man never knows when he's burned his potatoes," observed Cash Miller, chief store photographer. "A poor fish in here recently says he's got trouble at home and don't know why. He always done right, he says, and even when he went to Niagara falls he was thoughtful enough to send his wife's mother a souvenir postal card of the whirlpool rapids, saying affectionately, 'I wish you were here.'"—Thrill Magazine.

A MEAL A PERSON

... that's ALL it costs to cook the ELECTROCHEF way

Years ago, the early electric ranges were early to own and to operate, just as early automobiles were costly when compared with the cars of today. But these conditions have changed. A recent study of one thousand families showed a cooking cost of less than a CENT A MEAL a person. For this small sum, you can enjoy the CLEANLINESS of electric cooking, with heat as clean as sunlight; the DELICIOUSNESS of meals cooked electrically, with flavor sealed-in; the HEALTHFULNESS of electric cooking, with precious minerals and important food values retained. You will delight in a range that is attractive and genuinely modern in appearance. You will take pleasure in its sparkling enamel surfaces, as easily cleaned as a piece of china. Install an Electrochef in your home today. Ten years from now it will look as good as new!
