Orchard Demonstration Emphasizes Important Factor In Apple Sales

Described as an important occasion in the campaign of forward-looking men interested in the fruit-growing industry of southeastern Michigan, to hold and improve this section's market, the horticultural demonstration to be held in Farmington Township Friday afternoon holds the interest of all orchard men of this area. The process of grafting to obtain a change in varieties is one which fruit-growers of this section must learn and practice as part of their necessary effort to meet growing competition, according to H. D. Hootman of Michigan State College, who will conduct the demonstration.

Apple-growers of this vicinity have been exceptionally fortunate hitherto, Mr. Hootman said in an interview this week with the Enterprise, in that they have always been able to dispose of their product with little difficulty. With the development of intense competition from western apples, and also from apples upstate, the growers of this section stand in danger of losing their market unless they produce better fruit and in addition concentrate on the varieties which have gradually come to dominate the market in this part of the country. These varieties are the Jonathan, Macintosh, Steele's Red and Northern Spy.

Quick Change-Over

Most orchards contain a liberal percentage of trees of other varieties, according to Mr. Hootman, and in many cases these varieties are today in little or no demand. Unless the grower chooses to wait until he can plant new trees and develop a new orchard, his only recourse is to grafting, which is being carried on more and more extensively, and with increasing success. It enables the grower to get into the market with the most desirable and highest-priced fruit within a short time.

Grafting is also made advisable by circumstances beyond the grower's control, such as mistakes made by nursery-men from whom young trees are bought, or sudden change in market demands. A particularly interesting phase of fruit-growing, involving grafting, develops when it is found advantageous to grow a certain variety of apple to gain the advantages of another kind of trunk.

Some of the most desirable varieties of fruit turn out best when grown on a harder or sturdier trunk than that particular variety affords. The alert and astute apple-grower therefore combines the strong points of each to improve his yield and his financial return.

Mr. Hootman will use at the demonstration Friday a new material recently developed for grafting, a "brush wax" utilized to graft the limbs to the trunk. It has superseded an older "hand wax", which made grafting an unpleasant task for the fruit-grower.

All fruit-growers and any other interested are welcome to attend the demonstration, which will take place at the McCracken Orchards on Twelve Mile road at 1:30 p. m.

Petition Asks More City Pay Reductions

ing it". Another recommendation refers to seeking savings in electric expense, and suggests investigation of a change in pumping operations at the city wells. The commission has had this under consideration for some time and a report is expected Monday evening, as is more fully covered in another column of this issue.

Protest State Values

The subject of the other petition is the 1931 assessments of the State Tax Commission, which is also referred to in greater detail elsewhere in this issue. The petition relates that it is understood the State body is to revise its valuations before assessments for the 1932 State and County taxes, and asks that the December, 1931, valuations of the State Tax Commission be not used for the city assessments next summer. Instead, it is suggested that the State Commission's figures be simply disregarded, and that the 1931 valuations of the city assessor and board of review, be used for levying the city taxes for 1932, with adjustments that may seem advisable. It is asserted that the city assessor is not compelled to use the State Tax Commission's figures for purely local, or city, assessments.

Up to Thursday noon, the petition in reference to assessments had 18 signatures, and that referring to salary cuts and city expenses, 14 signatures.

"ALL for ONE and ONE for ALL"

This was the fearless, the challenging, the all-conquering battle-cry of The Three Musketeers, that mighty trio of ancient legend, who surmounted all obstacles and performed superhuman feats. This rallying cry, this spirit of unity, "All for one and one for all," made them invincible.

So, too, it is with a community. If we but stand shoulder to shoulder, we too, can overcome any obstacle and accomplish seemingly superhuman tasks.
