

Interchange Size: 633 Acres

After more than 10 years on the planning and design boards, Michigan's biggest freeway interchange will begin taking shape soon in southern Oakland County.

The State Highway Commission has announced that the Department of State Highways will take bids in Lansing Nov. 17 on two contracts involving the interchange. They total an estimated $17.4 million.

The interchange will require 633 acres in Novi Village and Farmington Township. It will link three interstate freeways—I-96, I-696 and I-275—and two other major routes, the future M-275 and M-102.

ONE OF THE two contracts, estimated at $12.3 million, calls for more than four miles of grading, draining structures, concrete paving, watermain alterations and construction of one bridge.

The companion contract, estimated at $5.1 million, calls for construction of 14 bridges. Work under both contracts is scheduled for completion by October 1974.

The final part of the interchange, which will connect up to the future M-275, is scheduled for contract letting in early 1975.

Two minor contracts on preliminary interchange work were let earlier this year. They involve hauling fill-dirt some 20 miles from the Chrysler-Davison interchange excavation to the east and west quadrants of the proposed new interchange.

About three-quarter million yards of fill-dirt are being trucked to the new interchange site from the Chrysler-Davison interchange area. The large land area is required for the interchange. Among highway engineers to provide high-speed turn facilities in five directions planning and designing the interchange, it is known as "the Big One."

THE NEW I-675 spur around Saginaw provides a new escape route for motorists trapped by openings of the Zilwaukee Bridge that carries I-75 over the Saginaw River. The seven-mile-long spur, costing $33 million, is expected to cut peak traffic loads one-third on I-75 around Saginaw by diverting local motorists. Only motorists traveling to Saginaw via I-75 are advised to use I-675 unless there is congestion created by Zilwaukee Bridge openings. The spur adds two miles to the I-75 route around Saginaw and is designed to serve motorists going to and from the city. I-675 and I-75 connect 3½ miles south and 1½ miles north of the Zilwaukee Bridge. I-675 makes a westerly loop as it travels through Saginaw, utilizing a high-level bridge over the river in downtown Saginaw.
