HUMANS IN LOVE PORTRAYED IN ANIMAL KINGDOM

Edward H. Griffith was so bothered by ambitious pet owners when it was announced that he was going to direct "The Animal Kingdom" that he had to issue an announcement that the RKO-Rai in adaptation of this Philip Barry play is not an animal story. He had offers, for his use, of trained turtles, squirrels, pigs and ducks.

"The Animal Kingdom" is a sophisticated modern drama having its title from the point of view of the central feminine character, whose opinion is that most men and women, despite their lofty pretensions, in affairs of the heart, often are as instinctive rather than wise, tender or human.

The story centers around a man who has two women in his affections—his conventional but voluptuous wife, who attempts to hold him with mere allure, and a pre-mature "light of love" whose unconventional mind and finer emotions are a constant call to him. The question involved is—which woman will hold him? Ann Harding and Leslie Howard are costarred in "The Animal Kingdom," with other important roles played by Myrna Loy, William Gargan, Neil Hamilton, Henry Stephenson and Ilka Chase. It's the attraction Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, February 26, March 1, and 2 at the Great Lakes Theatre.

There will also be a special Matinee Tuesday, 1:30 to 4 p. m.

Thirty Attend Dinner

Given At Legion Home

The regular meeting of the Grove-Walker Post No. 245 was held at the Legion home on February 16. A chicken supper was given to boost the attendance and about 35 were served. After the meeting the Bateman-Wood orchestra, furnished the entertainment. Al Smith Junior Vice-Commander, one of the entertainment committee secured the orchestra. The next regular meeting of the post will be held March 2. There will be entertainment of some kind, but the post has not as yet announced what it will be. All members are urged to attend this meeting.

Horowitz, Sensational

Young Pianist, To Be Heard At Ann Arbor

Vladimir Horowitz will play in Hill Auditorium Ann Arbor, in the Choral Union Series, Monday evening, March 6, at 8:15 o'clock.

An interesting reaction to Vladimir Horowitz's playing was that of a well known Hungarian patron of the arts who, after hearing the sensational young artist in Budapest, wrote to Steinway and Sons in New York: "I heard Horowitz. It was a tremendous achievement, so that I was absolutely speechless, and could not believe that I was hearing right. In fact I have heard as you know all great pianists but have never heard anything like this. I can only imagine that Liszt in his youth played like it. I wish I knew someone that has heard him, for I am absolutely bewildered, that I can't find out my own judgment. After the concert, I who never go into the artist's room as you know, was compelled to do so, and thank you, I found him a young slight youth, very modest, very sympathetic, tho I think he really gives too much."

This letter is characteristic in so much as no one can hear Horowitz without a very definite and personal reaction. Staid critics find themselves indulging in purple prose. Blase listeners rise in their seats and cheer. Conservative matrons are overcome by the urge to send a "Gaiety" note. Calm discussion on the subject of Horowitz's playing seems to be impossible. His audiences identify themselves unconsciously with him and the slightest criticism is taken as meaning "pistols and swords."

If It Were Not For This—That Would Be

At the Methodist father-and-son banquet Tuesday evening, Rev. Floyd Charles Johnson took opportunity to express the gratitude of the diners to various persons who had aided in the preparation. After each acknowledgment there was a round of applause and when he finally said, "Now just a few words more and I will sit down," the lads couldn't resist the temptation. The salvo of handclapping and whistling that followed exceeded all others.

Rev. Johnson, casting about for a reprisal, asked quickly that "that be put in the paper." Did not the Enterprise feel that it has in Rev. Johnson so good a friend (and hopes it's vice versa), it would be.

A large number of Farmington fruit-growers have attended the session this week in Pontiac of the Michigan State Horticultural Society. Ed Grimmer and Don Button took a leading part in discussions Tuesday afternoon of grading and marketing fruit.

Nation's Long Distance Headquarters Is Crossroads of World's Voice Highways

Below: The second stage, after seven stories had been added to the building's height in 1917.

Below: The original 17-story building as constructed in 1912. Center: The third stage—the 28-story structure has very nearly surrounded the original building which stands on part of the block.

THREE STAGES IN GROWTH OF HEADQUARTERS BUILDING OF LONG LINES DEPARTMENT OF AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND-TELEGRAPH CO.

Occupying a full city block in New York City and reaching 452 feet above the sidewalk, the recently completed Headquarters Building for the nation's long distance telephone service is practically a new structure. Yet in reality it is but the second enlargement of a telephone building which has occupied part of the site for twenty years.

Site First Used 20 Years Ago
It was back in 1912 that a 17-story building was erected at 24 Walker Street, New York, with a rentable floor space of 225,000 square feet. It fronted 124 feet on Walker Street and 88 on Lispenard, and at first was occupied only in part by the Long Lines Department of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Five years later its height was increased by the addition of seven stories, and it was on the twenty-fourth floor that there was installed the radio broadcasting equipment for station WBAI, which afterwards became the famous WEAF, and was later sold to the National Broadcasting Company.

In 1922, a main addition to the west and a smaller one to the east were completed, taking in the rest of the block, while the height was increased to twenty-eight stories. This enlarged structure now contains 227,000 square feet of rentable space, the identity of the original building has been lost in this process of enlargement, and even the address has been changed to 22 Sixth Avenue.

The Transoceanic Switchboard
Today, the building is the center of many types of communication. In addition to the main trunk, special service and direct telephone circuits woven through it, the structure is the nerve center for the great radio broadcast hook-ups. It houses the country's largest typewriter switchboard, the New York telegraph station, and certain offices for local telephones

In One Building

At Long Distance Headquarters in New York City—32 Sixth Avenue—are to be found:

The largest long distance telephone center in the world.
The junction point of many important cable routes of the Bell System.

Direct circuits to most of the important cities in the United States and to points in Canada and Cuba.

Radio telephone connections to Europe, South America and other overseas points, and to ships at sea.

The principal control point for the great radio broadcasting chains.

The largest teletypewriter exchange switchboard in the Bell System.

The center for all private wires from New York to other cities.

This one building represents the crossroads where wire and radio circuits meet to give world-wide telephone service.

service. Within it are handled calls over the radio telephone circuit to foreign countries and to ships at sea.

Probably the most interesting feature of the building's equipment is the transoceanic telephone switchboard, through which pass calls from the United States, Canada, Cuba, and Mexico to forty foreign countries and their possessions and to more than a dozen vessels which render ship-to-shore service.

Circuits to Five Continents
Bell and Bell-connecting telephones are now within voice reach of practically all of Europe, from the British Isles to the Black Sea and from the Baltic to Gibraltar, and all of Argentina, Chile and Uruguay, as well as Rio Janeiro and its environs in Brazil, and Lima, Calcutta and nearby communities in Peru. All of Western and Southern Australia can likewise be reached by radio telephone, as well as the islands of Java and Sumatra, the city of Bangkok in Siam, Capetown and vicinity in South Africa, Cairo, Alexandria and Port Said in Egypt, the Canary and Madeira Islands and Bermuda. Calls to Honolulu are switched on the Pacific Coast.

Direct Wires to Many Points

It is one of the operators at this transoceanic switchboard who handles a call whenever someone on this continent wishes to speak with someone else in Rome, Bermuda or some other overseas point, since the radio circuits to such points terminate at this switchboard.

Operators, in cooperation with the foreign operators concerned, complete the required connections.

Leading to the same switchboard there are also direct wire circuits from the principal cities of the country, so that the handling of a call from any part of the United States to a point overseas is almost as easy as one from New York City.

Foreign Directories on File

Although calls via the overseas switchboard are normally handled in English, many of the operators speak at least one foreign language. To aid them further, a comprehensive library of foreign telephone directories and other references has been compiled, thus facilitating the handling of calls to many cities on the other side of the world.

Another type of call handled through the same switchboard is one which joins two radio circuits: a call, for example, between Bermuda and Europe, or between a South American city and a ship at sea.

The new building is the crossroads of the voice highways of the world.
