Slippers of Destiny

By JUNE WATSON

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, Inc.

RAYMOND found the package on his table when he went up to dress for the Fleming's dance. He had thought that he would give up dancing, but this was a particular occasion, Billy Fleming having a birthday, and his wife insisting on a real old-time party.

So Raymond had tied him to his favorite shoe shop and been fitted to dancing pumps, and the oblong box testified to their arrival at the last minute. Raymond dressed leisurely and when he had finished he untied the oblong box and opened it.

There he stopped aghast. Instead of a pair of shiny patent leather pumps, he found nestled in a white tissue paper a tiny pair of high-heeled slippers, frivolous cloth of gold trifies that glistened in the light.

"Hang it all—of course I can't wear these," he told the world in a complaining tone. "Of all the absurd mistakes—well, Mrs. Billy, you can count one dandog man out." He put the little slippers away in his chest, smiling at them as he did so. Some little fluffy thing might be sighing for those very slippers, but she could not help smiling at sight of his new and shining pumps when they reached her!

"Not dandog?" asked Mrs. Billy, frowning at him.

He told her that, lacking dancing shoes, he had ordered them and been disappointed in their delivery. "You are like poor Nellie Warren," she said, she received an enormous pair of men's shoes instead of her own—she is wearing an old pair and is as cross as can be. Go find her and dance with her, fellow sufferers should console each other."

Raymond skirted the dancers and found a place comfortable for wait flowers. He wondered which girl would prove to be Nellie Warren. He liked her name, simple and unassuming, but she would have been splendid in gold slippers if—

He fell to watching the dandog feet of the girls, noting the dainty footgear until his eyes were dazzled with the procession of silver and colored ones. Then he started, for tripping along in perfect time to Billy Fleming's ponderous feet, were a tiny pair of shiny patent leather pumps—emergency shoes, he knew, for they were worn with golden blue silk hose and a golden tissue frock.

The girl herself—he caught a glimpse of a dark, twinkling face, golden haired eyes, a flash of rose color to cheeks and lips, and she was gone. She might not be his Cinderella of the slippers, but she was undoubtedly a wonder-girl.

"Hello!" belatedly Fleming's voice beside him. "Do take care of Miss Warren—Raymond. Arch Raymond—you've heard of him. Nellie; can't dance tonight because he hasn't any shoes. I'm called away to the phone." He drifted away into the crowd and Raymond smiled down at the wonder-girl whom Fate had set to him.

"Agent you going to dance?" she asked as her little feet kept time to the gliding music.

He glanced down at his feet. "I might try—I'm a clumsy beggar at my best," he apologized.

"Such a pity," she said teasingly after awhile as they paused for breath; "if you only had the stunning pair of patent leather pumps that came to me last night of my own darling golden shoes—you couldn't dance a bit better than you do."

"It that a compliment or otherwise?" "It isn't otherwise," she laughed.

Later in the evening they had danced together so often that people were smiling indulgently at Arch Raymond. His appearance at a dance was a mark of signal triumph for his hostess, and that he should be worshipping at the shrine of penniless Nellie Warren was a social triumph for the girl.

They had supper together, and when the huge birthday cake was cut, it was Nellie Warren who found a ring in her slice. "I've had the most delightful time," she sighed as they said good night.

"I shall never forget it," he said gravely, "and perhaps, tomorrow you will let me come and bring Cinderella's slippers."

"You had them?" she gasped.

"He nodded. "Mine went to you, and yours to me. If I had not seen you," he stopped, for he was saying too much for a social acquaintance.

"I may come?" he asked instead.

"Of course—I am staying with the Flemings."

So he went home—back to his rooms where the golden slippers were locked in his chest. Suppose he did take them out of their wrappings and reverently kiss each bit of glistening gold—were they not the shoes of destiny—had not their owner danced her way into his heart? And she—had not their eyes met?

He put his shoes away, his young eyes dreaming.

He knew that love had come at last.

Myrtle Elizabeth, the post-queen of Kappa Kappa Gamma, Do not be proud of having borne your misfortune. Could you have done otherwise? A very pretty question. Inasmuch as we can in any way be our misfortune, there is no cause for pride in meeting them. Much a spirit in which we meet them, in our own control. In that there is no cause for pride, for shame.

STATEMENT

By Willard Campbell

Friends have so strongly urged me to reply to an attack made upon me by a candidate for clerk on another ticket at the primary Monday, that I here outline briefly the erroneous statements made in a circular put out by Mrs. Ina A. Sturman. I cannot help but feel that the confidence in me displayed by the people of the Township Monday is the best answer, but since facts and figures were questioned, they may be easily demonstrated.

It is charged that "individuals who asked for information a few days previous to the September, 1932 primary were refused access to registration cards." This is untrue. Mrs. Sturman came to my residence on a day when we were preparing for entry 108 registration cards had been received the day before, in our new system of registration. I did decline to let her handle the cards until after the registrations were filed, but told her that as soon as this was done, in a day or two, she could see the entire registration, and as often as she pleased. She has not been back since.

Mrs. Sturman asks the question, if "the entire system of records has been set up and maintained by the present clerk," why does the Township hire a firm of accountants to work on the records each month? And also why the Township statement for the year ending March 31, 1932 shows items totaling $1,500 for accounting?

The firm hired by the Township are auditors, and it is not only the practice of every good business of any size to have their books audited regularly, but a Township audit is required. Lord would be the protests if the Township clerk or treasurer were permitted to handle the Township business of many thousands of dollars annually without any audit or check-up of any kind!

A candidate for clerk might promise, as Mrs. Sturman has done, to "care for the work without the Township paying for additional help," but I doubt if an honest Township citizen would allow anyone in the office of clerk, however honest or capable to carry on the work without having an audit from time to time.

The books are audited each month because the Township Board some time ago decided this would be better than the annual audit, as the Board would know at all times just exactly the financial standing of the Township.

As to the $1,500—(the figure should be $1,575)—these are the facts: Townships throughout the State had had no means of knowing what delinquent taxes they had due from the County treasurers. Many townships took steps to find this out by having a check-up made of all delinquent tax items as far back as 1924. In 1929 Farmington Township Board took action by the following motion, shown on the minutes of October 7, 1930: "Motion by Blanchard, supported by Head, that an audit be made for a complete set-up of the delinquent tax from 1924 to 1929, at a cost of $1,000." This was voted unanimously by the Board. This item of $1,000 has nothing to do with the annual audit cost whatever, and is entirely aside from it.

The remaining $575 was for the first year's audit under the uniform system required by a new State law. With the system put in effect the larger initial cost will not be repeated each year, and the cost this year and each year hereafter is $240, or $20 a month.

The statement as to "amount received and spent for welfare relief" put at $3,000, was also untrue, as only $750 had been received. It would be impractical to take up sufficient space to answer in minute detail or give all of the figures pertaining to each assertion. The above statements, however, and such claims as that "there has been no reduction in tax levies"—when the general fund item in the Township budget for this year is $12,000 as compared with $30,000 the previous year—are each one so far from the truth as to make it hardly worth while to consider refuting them seriously.

Any facts or figures quoted by me are at all times available to any citizen of the Township. They are part of the Township records and are their own best proof.

I wish to express my deep appreciation to the many who rallied round me and have urged the correction of the mistaken statements outlined above.

(Signed) WILLARD CAMPBELL, Adv.
