Vacations Are Necessary

It was Dewey who said that one could do a year's work in eleven months but never in twelve. There is little doubt that a vacation is as much a necessity as a good night's sleep. The question arises—what constitutes an authentic vacation? A vacation should be a period of mental and physical rest, with a change of scene if possible. No two persons require the same type of vacation. It would be ridiculous to say that a piano mover or a coal heaver needs strenuous exercise during a period of vacation. It would be equally absurd to think that an occupant of a white collar job can suddenly bloom forth into a Tilden, a Jones, or a Weissmuller. Moderation should be a fundamental in any vacation. The Michigan Tuberculosis Association sensibly points out that one cannot overnight subject a body that has been softened by continuous sedentary existence and the luxuries of civilization to terrific strains and expect to escape without paying penalties. Exercise there should be graded and should be used short of fatigue. Vacations are necessary, and they should be specialized to suit the individual person's needs and desires.

There Will Be Another Day

(Master Padlock)
Economists tell us that business has four cycles: prosperity, recession, depression and revival. Eight of these major business cycles occurred between 1885 and 1927, with as many booms as there were crises. Yet, many individuals fail to realize that what they are witnessing now is a repetition of what has happened before. Instead of preparing for recovery, they spend their time wallowing over today's woes. Stocks, bonds, real estate—everything that is being poured into the market by those whose thoughts are only for the moment—is being purchased by frightened investors who have learned that depression is the dawn of revival. And when the dawn finally breaks, those who have viewed the present in the light of the expense of those who feel the sun of prosperity has set forever.

Editors Are Human

(Exchange)
When a questionable situation arises in a town, it is quite the fashion to remark that the newspaper ought to say something about that. The average citizen feels quite certain he could run a newspaper better than the editor does, and if he were publisher of that sheet, he'd show 'em, you can bet. As a matter of fact, if you have a horse sense, he would do just as the editor does—put the soft pedal on family rows, church squabbles, scandals not involving major principals, and such matters of ultimate importance as will do just themselves with the passing of time. The newspaper critic ought not to expect the newspaper man to advocate or attack any proposition which he himself lacks the courage to support or assail over his own signature. The editor is willing, ever eager, to push any project in the public interest, but is not willing to pull chestnuts out of the fire for individuals or factions.

Trees Will Be Full

(Exchange)
A young man down east hung himself because some people found fault with him, says an exchange. Should this practice become general, the trees would be full of preachers, doctors, and editors. The preacher, teacher or doctor or editor that nobody finds fault with ought to hang himself, because he is dead and doesn't know it.

Michigan Day

(Pontiac Press)
Saturday, July 8, is to be Michigan Day at the Century of Progress show in Chicago. Governor Comstock will be the guest of honor and make a speech. Michigan bands will play and choruses sing. The State has $100,000 invested in our exhibit at Chicago. The money could be used to better advantage at home but inasmuch as space was contracted before that need became so pressing, the State's only course was to go through with the deal.

Now that we are in it, we should make the most of it for the advertising advantage of the recreational attractions of Michigan for the tourist. Michigan Day's program should impress upon visitors to the Chicago show not only the industrial output of a great State but the fun and enjoyment to be gained by a visit to our 10,000,000 acres of wilderness lands, 1,500 miles of Great Lakes shore line, 5,000 inland lakes and as many rivers with summer resort possibilities that stretch from Oakland to Keweenaw. Wolverines visiting the Century of Progress grounds on July 8 can serve themselves and their State by spreading the gospel of Michigan's attractions, its scenic and historical lure and the hospitality that is to be found in wild places or congested centers. It still pays to advertise.

The More Deadly

(Trenton Times)
Statistics in which the element of human equation appears are always interesting. We held up to our gaze the humanitarian side of the affairs of the race and the picture revealed fascinates us. Comparison is no less intriguing. In the six great wars fought by this country since the beginning of our national history, over three hundred thousand Americans have been killed in battle, or have lost their lives because of wounds or other causes to war. As a nation we have grown to look upon war as a calamity because of the toll that it took in human lives. Yet during the past 15 years the automobile has been responsible for terminating the lives of three hundred and twenty-five thousand human beings more than the loss sustained through deadly conflict by men engaged in the work of deliberately killing each other. It is also interesting to note that the total duration of conflict in the six wars was approximately 15 years, or about the same space of time. That the carelessly driven automobile should be proven by statistics to be more deadly than bullets or shells is hard of belief, but it is true, nevertheless. It will be well if we think of this the next time we are inclined to break the speed laws or indulge in any other infraction of the statutes set for protection to ourselves and the public. Think this over.

Still Need Newspapers

(Wenatchee (Wash.) World)
The modern newspaper performs so many functions, performs so many services and fills so many requirements of civilization that it has become indispensable to every intelligent family. The American newspaper was never so important, so interesting or so instructive as today. It is not only the news of every day affairs that makes the newspaper such an integral part of our modern daily life. It is the numerous features, scientific, social, household entertaining, educational and instructive that lend a added zest to the perusal of the family's favorite newspaper. And not the least valuable portion of a newspaper is the advertising page, containing business announcements and news of definite interest and value to the readers in every walk of life.

CLASSIC LOVE STORY TOLD IN "THE WHITE SISTER"

"The White Sister," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new talking picture version of E. Marion Crawford's undying romance, will be the attraction at the Great Lakes Theater, Sunday and Monday. Helen Hayes and Clark Gable are co-starred for the first time on the screen in the classic love story and a prominent supporting cast features Lewis Stone, Louise Closer Hale, May Robson, Edward Arnold and Alan Edwards, under the direction of Victor Fleming, who filmed the successful Gable-Jean Harlow talkie, "Red Dust." In the present film, Miss Hayes plays the role of an aristocratic Italian girl who turns down the suit of her father's choice in favor of a young officer in the Italian air force. When notified of his death at the front, she enters a convent. The story rises to a sensational climax when the lover returns and finds the girl's religious vows an obstacle to his happiness.

The Clarinet Section

No band can accomplish the coloring and flourishing possible in its playing when the clarinet section is undeveloped. On an average the clarinet player plays three times as many notes as any other member of the organization, excepting the piccolo player. Because of the speed required in its playing often girls do better than boys and since the instrument is a suitable size for girls to carry, the clarinet is the instrument of the band for girls to study. The present clarinet section is composed of Pearl Brown, Gilder Grimme, Lena Himmelspach, Wanda Drake and Fred Ready, as solo players. These instruments carry the higher register of notes, which are far the most difficult to play in tune. In playing the high register it is more difficult to produce pleasing tone quality also. Mary Jane Schroeder, Gordon Hogle, George Zerbini, Heler Schweim and Gerver Lancaster are the second and third clarinet players. The parts are about the same as to difficulty but easier in tone quality. This section is in need of new recruits at the present time and any one interested in starting in the band would do well to start in this section.

SOUTHERN HUNTERS BETTER

Lansing—The Conservation Department has added its voice in the age old argument among deer hunters whether those living in the clear country are better hunters than those living in the southern part of the state.

According to the Department's figures, based on reports of more than 27,000 hunters from all parts of Michigan, the southern Michigan hunter is a little better hunter, or else he is more apt to report his success.

The Department's statistics show that during the 1931 deer season, 51 per cent of the southern Michigan hunters who went north on Straits of Mackinac in November got their buck. Only 47 per cent of the upper peninsula residents, who hunted at home were successful.
