What Newspapers Give

(Birmingham Eclectic) Elton R. Eaton owns and publishes the Plymouth Mill. For years he has been a close observer of the relations "between government and other civic institutions, some of which were gained while he acted as former Governor Grosbeck's personal secretary for four years. Mr. Eaton, two weeks ago, read an article in The Eclectic, written by Thomas A. Neal in which the latter "took The Eclectic to task" and rebuked us for not being more philanthropic. Mr. Eaton, apparently, disagrees with Mr. Neal and sets forth his case under the caption of "The Greedy Always Want More." While we are sure that Mr. Neal's intention was friendly in the matter, and he therefore hardly merits the "greedy" adjective alluded to, we do feel that much of Mr. Eaton's argument is appropriate. It follows:

"The Eclectic can help pay its debt to the public by doing something for nothing," is the general trend of a communication published in the well known Birmingham Eclectic a week or so ago. The writer insinuates that the newspaper owes the public that community something.

Yes, it is true, the Eclectic or any other newspaper owes the public something—the Eclectic owes the public just what it is giving to it, a splendid newspaper that is worth six times per year what the public pay for it. But the writer is off on the wrong foot.

It is not a case of what a newspaper owes the public, but it is a case of what the public owes a well managed and properly conducted newspaper, a paper that serves its community as faithfully and as diligently as does the Eclectic.

When you get right down to facts, the public owes the newspaper a debt it cannot pay. All the agencies of Birmingham or any other town that profess to serve the public good, combined do not do one fraction as much for the community as does its newspaper.

Give? That is all a newspaper seemingly does these days. There are those that think a newspaper is the fount of all things, that it can give and give and give to this, and the other thing. Well, the newspaper gives and gives gladly of its all.

The average newspaper publisher is in the business because he likes public service and he is interested in matters of community and state development. Give? Take a minute to check over the issue of the Eclectic in which appeared the article about the "Eclectic giving something to the public."

Two full columns on the first page were GIVEN to the details of boosting off the start of a bank. There was almost a full column donated to the schools of that city on the first page. Two or more columns were given to a discussion of city matters. Turning to the inside pages nearly the entire second and third pages were GIVEN to community affairs. There was a whole column GIVEN to the churches. On the next page there was GIVEN two or three columns to the advancement of farm and garden matters and another column to the betterment of child life, almost another column was GIVEN to the promotion of a Birmingham art exhibit. So it ran all the way through the paper. Column after column GIVEN by the Eclectic to the development of the community and advancing of community projects. Talk about GIVING—the issue of the Eclectic we checked over was filled with material GIVEN for the betterment of its community—its churches, schools, societies—everything that has to do for the good of Birmingham. But this issue was nothing different than the average edition of the Eclectic or any other community newspaper. Turn the table around as it

Work and Wages

(Pontiac Press) In advocating an increase in employment to keep pace with production, President Roosevelt has recognized the thing stated by Senator Couzens to the Economic Conference when he said "getting jobs for the jobless, will solve many of our troubles."

It is a wage earner who makes the consuming market. When his numbers are large and his wages high the demand arises that calls for supply and makes for industrial activity, increased agricultural production and the whole realm of business revival. No nation can be successful, no great industrial revival survive and no people placed in that position where the average life is one of comfort, hope and happiness while a large number of people are without work or where wages are not sufficient to supply them with the ordinary needs of life and with some of the luxuries so well.

There must be increased purchasing power if there is to be increased production. Nothing is more axiomatic than that. The way to get not only in putting more men to work but in raising wages to a corresponding level with the increase in prices.

The Industrial Control plan contemplates trade agreements that will reduce the hours of work and increase wages along with the rise in price of products. The president fears industry in general has been lagging in this particular. He is ahead of employment in the two months and warning signals are flying which industry needs to heed in the face of the immense powers that have been placed in the President's hands.

Industry is asked to hasten completion of its own codes with the alternative that the Government will do it for them. The President has indicated that those codes will control excessive production, hours of labor and fix minimum wages. The reward eventually is to be higher prices, eliminating unfair and cut throat practices and the assurance of a fair profit.

The Thrill of Creative Effort (Harvard (Ill.) Herald) In our pursuit of material gain or of fleeting pleasures, we sometimes forget this bit of truth, tucked away in the middle of Roosevelt's inaugural speech: "Happiness lies not in the mere possession of money; it lies in the joy of achievement in the thrill of creative effort. The joy and moral stimulation of work no longer must be forgotten in the mad chase of evanescent profits. These dark days are the very times when we must begin to turn our backs to the mere possession of money. The thrill of creative effort—That's it!"

Two Blind Men And A Cripple (Exchange) At the meeting of the Central Missouri Press Association in Sedalia, Col. Cliff Harrison told of a newspaper which threatened to make a public exposure of a scandalous affair. The editor of the paper did not leave the community before the next press day. When press day came there were only three men left in town—two blind and a cripple.

should be—and begin to give something in return to the newspaper for the unlimited free services it renders to the public. However such an idea does not alter the mind of a critic. His general idea of things is something to find fault about and not to reward those entitled to consideration.

DOGS PROTECTED Lansing—Michigan's dogs no longer need cringe at sight of a sheriff. The dog law adopted in 1919 said "The sheriff shall also file upon complaint of the prosecuting attorney any dog that is in the habit of running at large unaccompanied by owner or his agent."

This provision was repealed by the 1933 legislature. Other changes in the dog law are: The age limit for registering dogs is increased from four to six months; license fees are reduced from two and four dollars to one and two dollars respectively before June 1. County boards of supervisors are empowered to reduce these fees in certain circumstances; fees of township treasurers are reduced from 15 to 10 cents per dog while those of the township supervisors or dog wardens are reduced from 20 to 10 cents per dog. Boards of supervisors are also given power to appoint county dog wardens, if desired.
