Extensive stream and lake improvement work, pioneered in Michigan is spreading to other states, according to the American Game Association, Pennsylvania and New Jersey have been most active.

NEW FISHING REGULATIONS

Leasing Extension of the open fishing season in Michigan's inland lakes for one month; restoration of the minimum size limit for perch, rock bass and calico bass; removal of white bass from the list of game fish and extension of the spring spearing season, were among the changes in inland fishing regulations adopted by the 1933 session of the legislature.

Fishing for certain species in designated "pike lakes" is now permitted the year around. The legislature extended the open season for fishing in inland lakes through the month of April. Until now all lakes have been closed March 31. They are now open until April 30, so that grass pike, walleyed pike, muskellunge, and yellow perch are not subject to a closed season in "pike lakes."

A minimum size limit of ten inches has been placed on landlocked salmon, a species now included on the list of game fish. A day possession limit is also included. The law restores a minimum size limit of six inches for yellow perch, rock bass and calico bass. The limit was restored, according to the Fish Division of the Conservation Department because of waste discovered. It was found that small fish were left in boats or on the ice in the winter.

Removal of white bass from the list of designated game fish permits the sale of this species. Commercialization of grass pike, which has been placed on the list of game fish is now prohibited when taken from inland waters.

CONSERVATION CORPS GROUP NOW AT WORK

Lansing.—Nine thousand young men, working under the President's Emergency Conservation Work program are now established in 45 camps in northern Michigan.

The last of the camps was established by July 1, with workers sent from Camp Custer, Fort Brady and Fort Wayne where they were "conditioned."

Camps were established almost daily through June as each group of 200 men arrived to begin work in the woods. A superintendent and several foremen reported to begin direction of the conservation work.

In the meantime work plans had been drawn by the Department of Conservation and maps at other data were placed in the hands of the camp superintendents.

Work on fire lines and fire hazard reduction is going on from each camp in state forests, game
