IMPORTANT FOREST WORK

IS WELL UNDER WAY

Ann Arbor—Few people, according to Professor Allen of the University of Michigan School of Forestry and Conservation, realize the scale upon which the Civilian Conservation Corps has been organized, moved, and equipped nor the strain which has been put on the military establishment and to some extent upon the Navy personnel.

The increase in the productive capacity of wild lands in Michigan, through the work of these 11,000 men under skilled supervision, is almost inconceivable.

Professor Allen declares, "and all of this is over and above the rehabilitation of the men themselves, for whom the movement was largely conceived," he continued. The morale of the men and the total amount of work accomplished is high he states.

LARGE CROWDS PROVE EDGEWATER POPULARITY

Edgewater Park, on Seven-Mile Road near Grand River, has proved a popular amusement center to persons living in the Farmington area during the present summer. The Detroit Amusement Corporation, which runs the establishment, is offering free picnic facilities, free parking and free bus service to the patrons of the park. The prices on rides have been reduced this season. Eddie Shell and his radio artists furnish the music for dancing in the ballroom.

People will soon discover that you can't buy a $100 suit for $20.

Good Cows repay good feeding

If you own cows that have the capacity to produce milk profitably, the profit is up to you. The cow will do her part if you give her a good feed—one that is absolutely uniform and made by a formula that never changes.

These are standards that the Larrowe Milling Company pledges itself always to maintain. The quality of Larro will never be lowered so long as Larro is made, regardless of what changes take place in the price of ingredients.

This promise the manufacturers of Larro are able to keep, because they have both the experience and the equipment to make a feed that never varies and that can be depended upon to produce milk profitably.

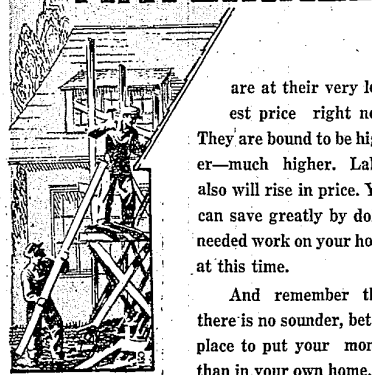

Let us prove that Larro will do for your cows what it has done for others.

Not Question of Frontiers

(Review of Reviews and World's Work)

What the majority of the American people have never recognized, and their administrations have never explained to them, is that the basic difficulty in Europe does not arise from any questions of prestige, militarism, or, in the larger sense, imperialism.

It would be just as possible in Europe as in America to set up separate Canada and Mexico from the United States, if the physical circumstances were similar. There is in Europe just as profound a desire for peace as there is in America, and a better appreciation of the meaning of war.

But since the races of Europe are hopelessly intermingled and each country desires national unity and racial solidarity, there are great areas of dispute and large populations which must be the victims of alien domination. Revision of the territorial decisions of the post-war treaties would not improve the situation; it would only substitute a German for a Polish solution, or a Hungarian for a Rumanian satisfaction.

All the devices for assuring peace which the Americans and British have invented during and since the war are useless just as long as one set of people makes peace conditional upon keeping what it has, and another upon getting back what it has lost. You can write all the pacts you choose, but they will be valueless as long as each nation formulates its own reservations.

Dodging Talking Films

(Progress)

Those few outstanding men and women who have remained silent in the face of every attempt to get them to say a few words before the talking camera include the pope, the emperor of Japan, the ex-kaiser and Stalin of Russia.

Although the pope has granted silent camera interviews and has spoken over the radio, he persistently refuses to confine the use of the camera to a neutral recording.

By the Japanese the emperor of Japan is considered a god and the direct descendant of the sun goddess and when the first attempt was made to secure a neutral recording of the emperor, the Japanese emperor has been photographed only a few times since his accession to the throne, and he has never spoken over the radio.

The best excuse given is that since it is the custom for all his subjects to prostrate themselves in his presence any recording of his majesty would create the utmost confusion wherever shown.

The Horn Hog

(Los Angeles Times)

The horn hog comes roaring down upon an intersection with badtem like the lightning right of the highway and more right to the crossing than a bandit to a bank, yet he thinks his bluster gives him special privilege. Those who arrogate special privilege on the highway are as contemptible as those who exact it in politics or trade. They are just plain pirates of a more refined age.

The horn hog rages up behind you, driving in the lane provided for law abiding people and horns you over into the gutter. He may have had ample room to pass, but that is not sufficient for his impudence. Then he slows down and parks double. There is hardly enough profanity to express your feelings.

Speaking of oldtimers, who can remember was about the only real worry religious people had was the spread of novel reading and theatre-going?

Then there was the girl who wanted to "bang" her hair and the old folks said she must have a bad streak throwing her back to her Great-Aunt Emmie who ran away with the traveling man.

Commodity Dollar

(Baltimore Evening Sun)

As we understand the commodity dollar it would work something like this: Each week your wife would make up a little list showing how much groceries she can get for a dollar, and how many eggs and how much butter and milk she can get for a dollar, and how much work she can get out of the cook and the carpenter and the plumber and the man who helps with the garden for a dollar, and how much she can bribe the children for a dollar, and how many bargains she can obtain at the department stores for a dollar. When she has done that she will strike an average and the result will be the commodity dollar for that week and by multiplying the commodity dollar by the number of things she needs she will obtain the number of commodity dollars required for the household for that week and notify her husband accordingly.

It will then be up to her husband, whose work is, of course, a commodity in the eyes of his employers, to do just exactly the amount of work required to equal the amount of commodity dollars his wife has asked for. He can regulate this by going to the cooler for less or more water, leaving at 4:30 p. m. or 5:30 p. m. and taking a longer or shorter time to complete a given task or, if being more intelligent about it.

Employers would not give a fixed salary, but instead would vary it according to the needs of this employee. In a large office this ought to be about even up in the long run. There would be no occasion for raising salaries, which ought to appeal to them, and there would be no more of the employee having to lend another a couple of dollars to tide him over until the end of the week.

In fact, people would stop working for money and work for commodities instead, and there would be an end of this nonsense of wondering where the money is coming from. The whole thing would be very simple and direct and there ought not to be any complaint from anybody except perhaps those whose duty it would be to compute the commodity dollar and keep the accounts straight.

Mistaken Identity

(Kansas City Star)

The presence of Citizeness Ivy Litvinoff, the wife of the Soviet foreign commissar, at the London economic conference recalls a story that delighted diplomatic society in Geneva, Switzerland, several years ago. Mrs. Litvinoff is an Englishwoman, who goes everywhere with her Russian. A certain ultra-conservative English lord is said to have met her at a conference in Geneva and recognized her as a child whom he had known in England. He was not aware, however, that she had become the wife of one of the Communist leaders in Russia. Having greeted her effusively and called her by her first name, the Englishman asked her what she was doing in Geneva.

"I'm here with our delegation," she replied.

"Why, I didn't know you were with our delegation," said the lord.

"The Russian delegation," Mrs. Litvinoff explained: Whereupon his lordship is reported to have become instantly rigid and never to have spoken to her again.

Got The Right Oracle

(Boston Transcript)

An enthusiastic reader of a certain popular newspaper serial sent a specimen of her sweetheart's writing to the calligrapher expert on the staff of the paper.

"Enclosed please find specimen of my beau's handwriting," she wrote. "Can you tell me if he is likely to make a good husband?"

Back came the reply "No, I'm afraid not, my dear. He's been a pretty rotten one to me for three years. However, thanks for the evidence."
