FLICKERING SWITCHBOARD LIGHT SAVES SEVEN LIVES

Mrs. Mildred E. Murphy, a telephone operator in New Britain, Conn., is credited with saving the lives of seven persons who were sleeping in the home of Frederick R. Hine the other morning when fire swept the building.

The flames reached telephone wires, burning the insulation and causing a short circuit. This caused a flickering light on the switchboard in front of the operator at the local telephone exchange. Suspecting that a fire might be the cause, Mrs. Murphy notified her supervisor, and together they started ringing the telephone bell in Hall's home.

The continued ringing of the telephone bell awakened Hall, members of his family, and guests, and they were able to get safely out of the house.
