Many Farm Groups Pay Visit to Stockyards

No longer in Ohio are farmers unformed about the fate of the live stock they send to market. They know now how they are handled, who sells them, how they are graded, and what kind of chops and steaks they make when slaughtered.

They have come, by this knowledge in three years by visiting, in organized groups, leading live stock markets, according to C. W. Hamman, extension specialist in live stock marketing for the Ohio State university.

During the last two years approximately 100 organized groups visited the stockyards and packing houses at Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. Attendance on these tours totaled about 8,000.

In five counties in the southwest quarter of the state in which live stock raising is a major agricultural industry, as many as 500 to 1,000 farmers have made such trips, in groups of 50 to 100.

Busy Old Monasteries

The monasteries of the Middle Ages were great agricultural centers, as well as centers of trade. They established markets, coined money and developed a system of credit.
