Chinese and Japanese
Chinese civilization and culture is several thousands of years older than that of Japan and, in addition, the Chinese have shown themselves to have an initiative and creative power superior to that of the Japanese, whose facility in methods and adaptation, in turn, is superior to that of the Chinese.

Mary's Surprise

By ALICE DUANE

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate WNU Service

"IT ISN'T as if there was any nourishment for me in meeting the Castles," argued Mary. "Mr. Harold Castle is married, and if he wasn't I wouldn't consider being the wife of a college president. So that settles that. So far as any social advantage that I can get by passing around tea and miscellaneous sandwiches at your friend, Mrs. Wilson's, while she and the wife of the new president stand in the front of the house and shake hands with two hundred and more women—well, I'm sure I don't see the point in it."

"Mary, you don't mean half you say," said her mother. "Of course, it is something of an honor to be asked to assist at the tea. Only seven other girls have been asked—but, anyway, even if there weren't any 'nourishment' in going to the reception—what do you have in mind for this afternoon that would be 'nourishing,' as you call it?"

Mary raised her pretty eyebrows. "I haven't decided what to do," she said. "Maybe I'll start west to seek my fortune."

And so it happened that on the day when all the women who were considered of any social importance around Blissville—the seat of Tome college—were attending the reception given in honor of the new hostess of the president's house, Miss Vernon, daughter of one of the leading trustees of the college, was driving her car toward the lake shore in a direction where there was little automobile traffic during the week days.

She had been speeding along for about fifteen minutes when she spotted a none too good-looking car drawn up at the side of the road and a little later a tall, well-built man peering into the open hood of the car's engine. Mary stopped her car and offered whatever assistance she could provide.

The man smiled and explained that he didn't have the least idea as to what was wrong. But the way it jumped had annoyed him and he knew something was radically wrong with the old bus.

Mary, who liked to tinker with her roadster, looked in at the engine. Her knowledge of the mechanics of automobiles was better than the average girl of her class because her brother had taught her considerably. She smiled at the man and asked if he had a tool kit.

After tightening a couple of bolts and readjusting a wire connection, she asked the stranger to try turning on the motor.

"I think it will be all right now," she said. "I hope you won't be late wherever you're bound for."

The man thanked her and laughed. "I was going anywhere in particular. And I hope I haven't detained you from some very important engagement."

Mary laughed. "I wasn't going anywhere, just—just out killing time."

"Want to kill some more time?" asked the man, and then he suddenly seemed embarrassed at what he had said. "I was wondering," he added, "if you would consider ourselves sufficiently introduced to warrant my asking you to stop in a little shop for some tea—there's a nice little place a few miles along this road."

Over the teacups Mary became more or less confidential as she talked to this man. Somehow his dignity seemed to melt her confidence. She told him that she had retreated from a reception in honor of the wife of the new college president. The man asked a few questions and then looked surprised, and after that very much amused. Finally Mary added that she had been brought up in more or less of a college environment, and in her opinion most college presidents and professors as well as their wives were insufferably dull.

The man smiled and the smile developed into a hearty, good-natured laugh. As they arose from the table and it was time for them to separate, the man produced his personal card and handed it to her.

"Perhaps I shouldn't have waited so long to introduce myself," he said. "My name is Harold Castle."

Mary looked bewildered, then she blushed and she wished she could sink right through the tea-room floor. But Mr. Castle held her hand reassuringly in his. "You see, I'm just a dull sort of college president—but at any rate I'm glad I'm coming to Tome for awhile. Perhaps, then, I'll be able to see you occasionally."

"I didn't suppose," stammered Mary, "that college presidents who have wives picked up girls on the road and took them to tea. It's perfectly all right with me, and I won't divulge the pleasant time we've had to anyone, but it's quite a surprise, Mr. Castle."

"That's the funny part of it all," said Mr. Castle. "There just isn't any Mrs. Castle. My sister is my hostess."

Mary arrived home a little while later. At the dinner table Mrs. Vernon couldn't keep her bit of gossip to herself.

"There really isn't any Mrs. Castle, Mary," she said. "Mrs. Wilson made a mistake and sent cards out to meet Mrs. Castle instead of Miss, and when she found out about it, it was too late to send out other cards. So really the new president is a bachelor. Perhaps he'll marry one of the girls in Blissville."

"That would be nice," responded Mary. "Wouldn't it, mother?"

Funds From Dances To Buy Loud-Speaker

Well pleased with the success of the first in a series of bi-weekly dances, the High School Seniors will continue with several more. The next dance will be held in the school gymnasium April 20.

Funds from the dances will go toward graduation expenses, the foremost of which is the hiring of mechanics who are at work on an electrical loud-speaking device to be used in the auditorium on Class Night. This will enable the audience to hear as well as see the program. Due to the size of the auditorium, this has been a major difficulty in former graduation exercises.

There will be no dance on May 4 as the J-Hop is scheduled for that date.

MARIONETTES IN TALKING SHOW TO BE HEARD MONDAY

Farmington will have a unique show Monday afternoon, and best of all, there won't be any charge for it. Talking Marionettes, those little folk that look and act like human beings, will be seen in a talking picture. The show will further resemble real life in that the title is "The Wife Wins."

The show will be at the Methodist Community Hall at 2:00 p. m. In addition to the headline attraction, there will be four others, "Thought for Food," "Buying a Living," "Partners in Purchasing," and "A Cartoon Comedy," making in all an hour and a half of entertainment.

The show, the first of its kind in this section, was prepared under the direction of the Kroger Food Foundation. All are welcome.

"Man's House Is His Castle"

Although the phrase, "A man's house is his castle," is perhaps of ancient origin, Sir Edward Coke, English jurist, is credited with having phrased the idea in the sense commonly used. "The house of everyone is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his repose," he ruled. Coke was born at Milham, Norfolk, in 1552, and died in 1633. He was solicitor general in 1592, speaker of the house of commons in 1598, attorney general in 1594, chief justice of the common pleas in 1606, and chief justice of the king's bench in 1613.

Vitamins E and G

Although vitamins E and G occur in a wide variety of foods in relatively small amounts, only a few concentrated sources are known. The germ and seed coat of whole grain are among the most important of these. Since the germ tends to become rancid and the bran detracts from the appearance of the product, when the grains are milled these parts are generally removed and used for animal feeds. Often the food constituents lost in this way are the very ones lacking in the diets of those who use large quantities of highly milled grains and prepared cereals.

Battle of Jutland

In the Battle of Jutland in the World War the British fleet consisted of 37 capital ships, eight armored cruisers, 26 light cruisers and 80 flotilla leaders and destroyers. The German fleet consisted of 37 capital ships, 11 light cruisers, 63 flotilla leaders and destroyers. The British lost three battle cruisers, three cruisers and eight torpedo boats. Germany lost one battleship, one battle cruiser, four light cruisers and five torpedo craft.

Traffic lights, such as those which direct motorists at numerous intersections throughout the country, control shipping in the Cape Cod canal. The lights are on a pile dolphin near the western entrance of the canal.

Frequency of Storms

The occurrence of more lightning storms in summer is caused not alone because weather conditions are then best for the formation of strong upward currents of air having high conductivity, but also because the raindrops are probably warmer.

When Mark Twain Edited a Newspaper

A subscriber wrote him that he had found a spider in his paper and wished to know whether it meant good luck or bad. Twain replied, "Finding a spider in your paper is neither good luck nor bad. The spider was merely looking over our paper to see which merchant was not advertising, so that he could go to that store, spin his web across the door and lead a life of undisturbed peace."
