It Happened Like This

By VERNON DARE

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, Inc.

WHEN news spread around town that Joe Albert and Peggy Rogers had been secretly married and had left town for a honeymoon that included Cedar Rapids, the whole town was agog.

What could have happened to Joe's engagement with Celia Winslow? Perhaps Celia wasn't quite sure about the whole affair herself. But here's the whole story. To start we'll have to go back a ways to a conversation between Peggy and Celia, who for many years had been close friends. It happened like this:

"Peggy, you're just wasting your breath. I simply won't have anything more to do with Joe."

"Well, I think you are acting like a narrow, caty girl. You know very well how much Joe loves you or he wouldn't have asked you to marry him."

"Then he's got no right to make engagements with a girl he was engaged to before. She's probably just come East to make up to him again—even if she is married herself. Joe should have called me up first, instead of just phoning me to say he had made a date for us tonight and hoped I would appear my best to meet his old friend. Well, I won't go that."

"But, Celia, Marge's husband is along. It was just to be a pleasant foursome."

"Yes, with me pained off on hobby so that Marge and Joe can talk of the dear days gone by. Not for me."

Peggy stood up and pulled on her chiffon scarf. "I'm sorry you couldn't have hidden your jealousy," she said, "and you've hurt Joe plenty."

Peggy went home and tried to shake Joe's troubles from her mind and also tried to be fair and impartial as far as Celia was concerned. She had scarcely arrived at her home before the telephone rang.

"Peggy, this is Joe again. You can't do anything with her? Well, you've been a swell sport. But here's a question you must say yes to. Will you be Celia for me on evening?"

Peggy gasped. "What good would that do?"

"As a matter of fact, Peggy, I don't want Marge to discover that I'm engaged to a girl that won't come around and meet her. She's one of the old gang and it hurts me like the dickens to have her see me in a mess like this. It would be spread all over the old home town and people who don't know Celia would have an awful impression of her."

"O. K., Joe, I'll be glad to help you out," said Peggy. "I'll look my prettiest and you can call for me at seven. I won't fail you."

Marge and Marge's husband proved most charming and there was not the slightest doubt that they too found Peggy charming.

But then who wouldn't? Peggy's eyes were a mixture of mauve and deep blue and her lashes were long and upturned. She was sincere and apparently much in love with Joe. Joe would have been only too pleased to have had greater possession of Peggy during the evening but Marge's husband saw to it that nothing like that happened. In fact Joe felt something like a thundercloud enveloping him as he watched Peggy and Marge's husband having dance after dance together and having no thought for anyone but themselves.

Marge glanced amusedly at Joe's troubled eyes. "Joe, Bill is just doing that to tease you and to give us plenty of time to chat. We love each other so much that we won't even think of anyone else seriously." She put a sisterly hand on his. "Don't be jealous—jealousy breaks up too many happy marriages. I think your fiancée is really charming. And yes, Joe, she doesn't care how much time we spend together. She trusts you—you must trust her. She's worth it."

Joe smiled and returned the pressure of Marge's warm fingers. "All right, Marge, I'll take your advice and try not to be jealous. And since you like her so much, Marge, maybe we'll stop off at Cedar Rapids on our honeymoon and visit you. How's that?"

"Peggy," said Joe, an hour later when he had Peggy tucked carefully beside him in the taxi homeward bound. "I told Marge that I would bring you out to visit, then on our honeymoon."

Once more Peggy gasped. "Celia and I are not exactly twins," she told him. "How will you explain it all? I'm sorry, as personally I think Marge and her husband are both charming company. I wish they lived here in the East so that I could see some more of them. I do think, Joe, you might have been a little more thoughtful of Celia. If you had telephoned her first and asked her if she wanted to make the engagement, she might not have felt as she did. I must remember. Celia is a little jealous but that is quite natural."

"I suppose you're right, Peggy, but I'm through with Celia now."

"Why the—now?" questioned Peggy. "Because, don't you see, you're there any chance in the world you'll have me?" Joe spoke wistfully. "There must be a chance—I don't think I could live if you are in love with some one else. However," he laughed triumphantly as he folded Peggy in his arms. "I'm not going to kick in and I have already promised Marge—you know."

"Of course we couldn't disappoint Marge," Peggy said happily.
