Coldwater, Mich.
Farmington, Mich.
Dear Mr. Levinson:

Have faced the Arctic blasts of winter. Raked, but not dusted, have made garden ready for spring plowing; tomorrow morning. Will rake, smooth and plant this week so as to be able to Model T to my old home in the very near future and see for myself whether C. W. A. and all the other A's too numerous to mention, left any foot prints in the sands of time. I can't bring any "garden" products, it is too early, nor any fish, as Roosevelt ala J. P. Mc has the fish market cornered. But later hope to make good.

With best wishes for you and Mrs. L. and the dear old friends of long ago, I remain,
Yours with much respect,
W. H. Wiedand.

Salutes Heroes

To the Editor:
My Grandfather, Horatio Lee, sold his farm to Wm. Smith; he had a family of seven boys and two girls. Three of the boys enlisted in the War of the Rebellion, and George, who had a family and lived in Novi, gave his life to help stop the charge of Longstreet's Brigade. They moved to Seven Mile Road and Lahser and of course are not entitled to have their names on the monument in front of the Farmington Town House.

A little further West of the Ten Mile Road was our friend Norman Barber. He had advanced ideas on disarmament; that is if they would leave their guns and bowie knives at home and fight with their fists he would be glad to go. He did go as engineer and pioneer building bridges and roads, and when a shot struck a brick smoke house a brick hit him in the hip and he had a limp from then on. He was a foe of war and a personal friend of my father and of mine, and died at his son's in Charlotte.

Charles Stafford, son of Norman Stafford whom my father bought a farm from, enlisted and was appointed a lieutenant in a colored regiment. An order had been issued that any white man found officiating in the colored regiment would be hanged on a gibbet higher than Haman's. My father and I lived there and with them on the farm while the exchange was being made, and I remember him and his sword, especially the sword.

Going West on the Ten Mile Road where it crosses Middle Belt Road was the Hibbard farm. Albert Hibbard was born there, grew up and where his neighbor was dented he took his place. He was dented and was given a furlough and he spent a month with his mother and friends. When Burnside was planning his battle of Fredricksburg Albert was sent for. In the charge the Confederates were protected by a stone wall and the three charges made by the troops of Burnside were mowed down in slaughter. Even the last charge when they charged with unloaded guns and cold steel was unsuccessful. Albert Hibbard gave his life there without trace. Several days afterward the dead were put under ground. The best that the Government says about him is that he was missing in action. It seems to me that it would be quite a good justice to have the Middle Belt Road named for him.

On the North side of the Ten Mile Road was a Smith farm. George Smith enlisted and was captured by the Confederates and paroled but he would not lose all his fighting blood and enlisted under his Mother's name, Wilbur, in the regular army. After the war closed he was ordered West with Custer to fight Indians. I well remember when he returned he had a long black beard. He was not very successful at farming and got a job on the police force in Detroit, and long since passed on. Even with two sisters in the army he didn't get his name on the monument in the Town House Lot.

Our friend, Wiedand, lives at Coldwater and stops off at Farmington to shake hands with his old friends when he is attending the 22nd regiment at Pontiac. My own participation in the conflict was going with my mother and her sister when the 22nd Regiment trained for the Front. The 22nd Regiment left at the old Fair Grounds and marched down Saginaw Street to the depot. The sidewalks were lined with their relatives and friends. I was told it was a sad company as they all realized that many of them would not return.

I write this as a tribute to the Heroes of Happy Street.
Frank Lee.

The Universalist Missionary Society will hold their annual business meeting at the Universalist Church Saturday afternoon, 2:30, June 23. The drawing for the quilt will take place. A short program will be given and tea will be served. All friends are invited.

Sunday, June 10, Miss Ada Boynton fell on the sidewalk near her home and suffered an injury to her hip.

It was proved to be more serious than was at first thought, and will probably keep her confined for several weeks.

Appeal Made Not To Overcharge Tourists

J. John Pope, President of the Michigan Press Association, is one of a large number who have called attention to the tendency in some sections of the state to overcharge tourists. He says:

"There is every indication that this will be Michigan's greatest tourist year. Early returns from our advertising campaign already show that out-of-state visitors are beginning to come into the state earlier than ever and in larger numbers."

"It is highly essential, if we expect them to return in future years, that every courtesy be extended to these people, that profiteering be eliminated, and that the greatest hospitality possible be shown these newcomers to our state. The tourist business, according to a survey of the U. S. Department of Commerce, conservatively estimates that seven million non-residents enter Michigan each year, spending a total of $24,000,000 in this state. This survey, the first of its kind, conducted by the Federal Government, was a most careful one and consisted in the checking of cars entering the state on our main highways, reports from the books of hotels, gasoline stations, and resorts and other sources of information."

Save Your Good One

Many people find it economical to have a low-price watch or dig up an old one to use during the summer, instead of wearing their "good" one. A watch gets so many knocks in vacation season.

We can provide you with a low-price watch that keeps good time, or repair one that you may have discarded.

"TRY IT YOURSELF MR. HUSBAND!"

—You try doing the housework with a lot of cold, clammy water. You try fooling around waiting for water to heat—depending on furnace coils after furnace weather (do you know how much fuel they waste in the winter, too?)

DO HUSBANDS KNOW?

Husbands know what comfort there is in an ever-ready supply of hot water for shaving and the bath at any and all hours. But most husbands don't realize what such hot water means in running the home. Instant hot water for the dishes, for baby's bath, for the laundry, for hurrying cooking, for housecleaning, for the hundred and one things that are a regular part of every woman's busy day.

TRY IT YOURSELF—THEN YOU'LL KNOW WHAT A THRILL IS IN THIS
