Our Candidate for the Legislature

Farmington cannot but heartily welcome, and enthusiastically endorse, the candidacy for the Legislature of Archie G. Leonard. The announcement of his entry into the field gives Farmington a new and keener interest in the elections that will be held this Fall.

It is not merely that Mr. Leonard, or "Archie" as we all know him, is a Farmington man. As a local candidate, he would be entitled to expect the support of his own community, as might any man provided he be not deficient in character or so hopelessly outclassed in ability by another candidate that even his neighbors could not conscientiously favor him. But, most happily, in this case just the reverse is true. Farmington not only can whole-heartedly get behind Archie Leonard, to the last man and woman, but can proudly offer him to the First Legislative District of Michigan as a man outstand ing in character, ability, education, and experience, to represent us

Of these things-his character, education, ability and experience

Of these things—his character, education, ability and experience, no one in Farmington or indeed, most of Oakland County, needs to be told. There is scarcely a community within forty or fifty miles in which he has not appeared, either in his work as county school of ficial or as a speaker.

It is indicatize of the character that is in him that although years ago he had achieved an education considerably beyond the average, his zeal for further learning and self-improvement carried on, and though carrying the burdens of family support that alone are sufficient to fully occupy most men, he went on to win further honors—degrees as master of arts and bachelor of laws, from two colleges in the State.

Four years as deputy commissioner of county schools has helped to fit him ideally for legislative work. Both tasks require for complete success not only tact, persistence and keen understanding of human nature, but something more—that high type of character and personality which influences by example as well as by words. Just as Archie Leonard has been able to influence for the better hundreds of Oakland County boys and girls who were headed for other that has to schooling, so he will be able, as a legislator, to help greatly toward bringing to the Legislature and politics generally, a clean, wholesome, high-minded influence, of which there is all too little in Michigan at the present time.

Newcomer to politics though he is, Farmington can see ahead for "Archie" may be the subject of the county has in the staturday.

Mrs. A. Arma Dickerson is spending the week, and might but a brilliant success, and will lend every effort.

assure it. Many assets will aid him in his campaign. One might mention his ability as a public speaker, and in this regard Farmington can give assurance to the Republican party of the County that in nominating Archie Leonard in September, the party will bring to its lists an orator of power and influence without a superior in this part of the State. But it is not as a speaker that this candidate stands out primarily. Just as "actions speak louder than words," so the man that Archie Leonard is, speaks louder than anything he may ever say. It is significant that the thing of which he has always been the most proud in his years at Farmington, is not the speeches he has made, the eagerness with which audiences listen to him and follow his words, nor their spontaneous bursts of applause. It is, as he once told an audience in church dining hall here, a record that was made, not by him, but by the hundreds of pupils whom he guided through the most important and susceptible years of their lives: in his seven years at Farmington, one and only one of the hundreds of boys and girls who attended school and were graduated under him, had strayed from the upright path of life.

It is such a man that Farmington, with pride, offers the first District as a cancidate well-fitted for the Legislature, Worthy of following other Farmington men who have sat in that body, P. D. Warner, Governor Warner, and Hairy McCracken, men who served with honor to themselves and their community. He will carry on the high tra dition they established, of integrity, honor and genuine ability.
