FOUR-YEAR-OLD CALLS HELP, SAVES BROTHER

Operator Locates His Mother;
Both Are Removed in Time
From Burning Home

A hero at the age of four, Richard Peters, a little yellow-haired boy with big blue eyes and curly cheeks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter W. Peters of Reading, Pa., is more interested in playing games than in telling about his exploit. Indeed, Richard can't see the sense of making any fuss about it at all.

Smoke Made Him Cries
It all happened one afternoon a short time ago when Richard's baby brother was sleeping and there was no one else in the house except Richard, who was playing with a puzzle. Suddenly, clouds of smoke swept up from the cellar, right into the very room where the children had been left. The smoke made Richard choke, it was so thick and black, but he had been told to stay in the room with the baby and so he wouldn't go outdoors.

"I Want My Mama"
But it was annoying, and as Richard looked around the room, he saw on the table the telephone. Himself, had never used the instrument, but he had watched his parents use it many times, so he knew what it was all about. He went to the instrument and lifted the receiver. As he had seen his mother do it earlier that day.

Miss Mary Thornton was at the local switchboard. To her call of "Number please?" a childish voice replied, "I want my Mama." "Sensing that something was wrong, she asked where his mother was and the child replied: "She's over at Mrs. Towle's."

The operator looked the name up in the directory, found a family by that name living in the vicinity, and put the call through to their telephone.

Rescuers Crawl Through Smoke
When Mrs. Peters, accompanied by Mrs. Towle and her brother, reached the Peters' house, they saw smoke pouring from the windows. A call for the fire department was put in while Mrs. Peters and Henry Towle crawled through the smoke on their hands and knees to rescue the baby from the crib and carry Richard, already partly overcome, out of the house.

Undoubtedly, young Richard prevented a tragedy, but what's the use of making so much ado about it, he thinks. It spoils your fun when so many people come to see you just when you are in the middle of an exciting game.
