Homemaker's Corner

by Home Economics Specialist
Michigan State College

The combination of hot weather and the extra changes of clothing needed combine to make wash day dreaded by most women, but the drudgery of the day can be lightened by methods recommended by home economics specialists at Michigan State College.

Hard water is one of the bad features of wash day which can be avoided by the use of home-made water softeners. Trisodium phosphate and washing soda are two of the best softeners and cost the least. Lye and ammonia are not so desirable, and borax is expensive although it is especially suitable for washing wool and silk.

The amount of softener to use depends upon the hardness of the water. Soft water needs none, fairly soft water should be treated with one or two level teaspoons of salt soda or one of trisodium phosphate for each 10 gallons. Moderately hard water requires three of four teaspoons of salt soda or two of trisodium to each 10 gallons, and very hard water will need five to seven teaspoons of salt soda or four of trisodium for each 10 gallons.

The hardness of the water can be tested by adding not over a half teaspoonful of the softener to the amount of water needed for washing. Permit to stand for five minutes and then dip out and test a pint of the water with one or two teaspoonfuls of soap. If soda form, the water is soft enough; if no soda form, add more softener and test again after allowing the softener time to react. When the proper amount of softener has been found, the amount can be recorded and used in the future. The cost of the softener can not be charged as entire added expense because its use permits the saving of soap, more of which is required for laundering with hard water.

EXTENSION PHONE SAVES TWO TRAPPED BY FLAMES

An extension telephone in a Montclair, N. J., home is credited with saving the lives of a woman and her son recently. Both were asleep in the south wing of their rambling, three-story shingle house when they heard their dog, Rex, whining and scratching at a bedroom door. Going into the hall, they found they were trapped by flames on the second floor. Fortunately, there was an extension telephone in the bedroom. The woman called the fire department, and when firemen reached the scene, they carried the woman, her son, and Rex down a ladder to safety. The house was almost a total loss, and if it had been equipped only with the downstairs telephone, loss of life also would probably have resulted.

Game Lovers Planting Winter Food for Birds

Three tons of seed mixture, prepared according to the formula of the Game Division, Department of Conservation, are being used by individuals and organizations in summer to grow winter food and cover patches for game birds and animals.

The last 2,000 pounds made available by the Department was recently sold by Michigan Farm Bureau. This brings the total amount of seed mixture sold by the Farm Bureau this year to 6,000 pounds, a ton more than the amount sold last year.

San Francisco's Chinese Telephone Office Witnesses Unusual Ceremony

Seated in front are Dow Lau, left, and Ho Lee, right, the first Chinese telephone operators to retire on pensions from the famous Chinatown central office in San Francisco. Dow Lau has had 20 years of service at the switchboard and Ho Lee has had 25 years. Standing on either side of Mrs. C. M. Alfonso, traffic employment supervisor, are other operators in the "China" office, all of whom have been saying "Day huey bin she aht"—which is Chinese for "Number, please!"—for 10 years or more.
