A HEROIC TRADITION UPHELD—St. Paul, Minn., Siar A leiphone operator at St. James, Minn., has pluckly upheld a noble tradition—the tradition—the tradition—the tradition is mainly, that there is always a plucky telephone operator to save communities in times of catastrophe.

Disregarding finames that were sweeping through the telephone building, Grace Gook such that were sweeping through the telephone building, Grace Gook such that were sweeping through the telephone building. Grace Gook such that were sweeping through the telephone district of St. James.

This kind of unpremeditated and spontaneous heroism is worth a thousand bait-raising attunt by which synthetic heroes draw attention to themselves. It is that trate kind of bravery which obliterates all thought of personal safety in the sole desire to bring succor to others who may be in danger.

If there are any extra media not in use, Grace Gook ought to have one, and a grateful community doubless will see to it that she does have one. But no media of predicts much who daded a horrible death to save her tows and her neighbors. Bome services are unpayable in material forms. Here is one.
