ADVERTISEMENTS

Are Your Guides To Value

Experts can roughly estimate the value of a product by looking at it. More accurately, by handling and examining it. Its appearance, its texture, the "feel" and the balance of it, all mean something to their trained eyes and fingers.

But no one person can be an expert on steel, brass, wood, leather, foodstuffs, fabrics, and all of the material that makes up a list of personal purchases. And even experts are fooled, sometimes, by concealed flaws and imperfections.

There is a surer index of value than the senses of sight and touch... knowledge of the maker's name and for what it stands. Here is the most certain method, except that of actual use, for judging the value of any manufactured goods. Here is the only guarantee against careless workmanship, or use of shoddy materials.

This is one important reason why it pays to read advertisements and to buy advertised goods. The advertised product is worthy of your confidence.

Merchandise must be good or it couldn't be consistently advertised.

'It Was Somebody's Birthday'

JOSEPH WHITTING was having a nervous breakdown. It was quite simple, really. Nervous like guitar strings, a dull "thump-thump" where his heart should be—and then, hallucinations!

So Joseph Whitting was setting out for a peaceful sojourn in the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. His doctor had advised merely that it was "the only thing."

He almost felt himself relaxing as he reclined luxuriously in the comfortable lobby of one of Toronto's finest family hotels.

Longingly he watched the people passing in and out of the revolving front door. He observed with awakening interest the graceful progress of a young girl who swung in gaily with her escort, and watched her until she had passed into the sumptuous banquet hall at the other end of the lobby. He noted with a feeling of pleasure and appreciation her tall, graceful figure, her vivacious smile and the delightful quality of her fresh, brunette beauty. He appreciated her elegant attire appropriately; the striking contrast of red spangled evening dress and red satin slippers against a black velvet evening wrap.

Other immaculately dressed couples entered and strolled into the banquet room; evidently there was a formal dinner scheduled. Joseph Whitting turned his head back wistfully toward the revolving door, then started.

Another young girl was entering, chatting merrily with her male companion—a young girl, tall, delightfully brunette, and attired in a red spangled evening dress, red satin slippers and a black velvet evening wrap.

The victim of nerves and hallucinations stared wildly, fixedly, at the beautiful apparition until it disappeared into the banquet hall.

Grinly trying to keep his nerves under control, Joseph Whitting again turned his head toward the revolving door.

Two young girls were entering. They were tall, beautifully brunette and garbed in red spangled evening dresses, red satin slippers and black velvet evening wraps. They were as alike in appearance as two peas, and identical with those other two young girls who had just passed into the banquet hall.

Joseph Whitting groaned—and collapsed. An elderly gentleman in full evening dress was brought hurriedly from the banquet room. He asserted his professional authority by taking the bundle of nerves by the wrist. The rest was routine.

"There," he said, "as he took off his glasses and surveyed his ruffled patient, 'how do you feel now?'"

Joseph Whitting cast an apprehensive glance toward the revolving door, then managed a sickly smile. "I guess I'm all right now, doctor," he murmured, embarrassed. "Thanks for fixing me up."

Suddenly Joseph Whitting stiffened and jerked erect. He gripped the arm of his chair and turned a wide-eyed stare full on the revolving door.

A young girl of tall, brunette loveliness was entering with her escort. She was attired in a becoming ensemble of—red spangled evening dress, red satin slippers and a black velvet evening wrap.

With a cry, the victim of "thump-thump" sprang to his feet and swooned over a smoking stand. Resignedly, the good doctor again opened his little bag.

Some minutes later, Joseph Whitting ventured to open one eye, then the other. But what he saw caused him to close them with a groan.

Slowly he opened them again and gazed unbelievably at the five young girls grouped solicitously around his chair. He observed with a stoking feeling, that they were attired in red spangled evening dresses, red satin slippers and black velvet evening wraps. He couldn't help noticing, too, that they were beautiful, tall and dark—just the way he had seen them, and he was sure, unreasonably alike as five peas!

Joseph Whitting felt himself a wreck, and about to break.

"You have quite a case of nerves," commented the good doctor. Then, as he observed his patient's fascinated gaze and his fair objects, the doctor paused.

"Perhaps you would like to meet the young ladies who helped to bring you here," he suggested pleasantly. "May I present—Marie Anne, Yvonne, Emilie and Cecile Duval?"

As the five charming "hallucinations" curtsied prettily and smiled at him, their lovely dark eyes soft with concern, Joseph Whitting, nervous wreck, felt something go "thump-thump" inside of him.

"I'm sorry you can't join us for the party," said the Doctor Duval sympathetically, as he steered his furiously "thumping" patient toward an elevator. "I'm sure the girls would be delighted to have you. I suppose they'll be concluding proudly, 'that we've had them a grand birthday party tonight—It's the Quintuplets' eighteenth birthday—"

Bear's Friendliness Results in His Death

Because he was not afraid of people and liked to make friends, the camp bear of Wilderness State park has come to grief. He was shot by a farmer, who thought he was trying to invade his home. The bear was released from his cage early this summer. Sometime later he encountered a surveyor group of CCC men from camp, and approached gleefully. When his former campmates took to convenient trees, the bear turned his attention to their transit and when he left the instrument was a wreck.

Common House Fly Lays Egg That Hatches Maggot

The house fly undergoes a complete change of form in its development from the egg to the perfect fly. The larvae of the house flies are popularly known as "maggots." House flies breed in almost any decaying matter of an animal or vegetable nature. Horse manure forms the chief substance in which the larvae are found, and heaps of such manure are the principal breeding places of these insects.

A single fly is capable of depositing from 100 to 150 eggs at one time, and five or six such patches of eggs may be deposited during the fly's life. The eggs are oval in shape, one end being slightly broader than the other toward which the egg tapers slightly. They are nearly white in color. In warm weather these eggs hatch in from 8 to 24 hours after being laid. Before hatching naturally, maggots cast their skins twice. According to the temperature, the maggots may become full-grown in five days. The full-grown larvae is a cream-white, legless maggot. The body tapers off from the middle to the anterior end.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ferris will leave this week to enter Moody Bible Institute in Chicago.
