able debating, Mr. Eaton finally decided to accept this opportunity. Here Seven Years
Mr. Eaton came to Farmington seven years ago and before residents of the community realized II, and taken a number of untrained boys and girls and built a musical organization which attracted attention throughout this area. Ills canability and dilligence, and the results in activity, who the entire community to support of "The Band." Soon It was entering. State high school band contests, and a second-pince prize definitely put the Farmington hand 'on the man." In contests that followed It was surpassed only by the Oxford outfl, which had been going for many years (and, it was loudly whispered, included a generous sprinkling of ofder members who had long-since received diphomas).
Mr. Eaton nateuded Taylor Uni-older members who had long-since received diptomas).

Mr. Eaton attended Taylor University in Unland, Indiana and Michigan State College from which he received an A. B. degree in 1928. At all of the schools which he attended Mr. Eaton studied academic subjects which have enabled bim to teach mathematics and chemistry as well as music. Long before he went to college, Mr. Faton studied music and continued to study it by hinness in long with his academic work.

Mr. Eaton regrets leaving Farmingtion and hopes in his new position he will get the same degree of cooperation which he has enboyed from the members of the Farmington High School Band.

Do Not Neglect Your Home

Splintery steps, a sagging porch, cracked sidewalks, warped boards, are not the elements of a good picture. And yet that will make up the picture your neighbors will have of your home if you neglect the repairs that it needs.

The longer you delay having repairs made, the more costly they will be. Now, while the prices of materials and labor costs are low, is the time to have this work ing evidence I've seen that people are at last willing to bank on what the future holds.

"For some time we have been seeing bigger crowds at the theat-ers, at the beaches or out to watch the Thers. We've been told that more clothes are being bought, that more clothes are being gought, that more books are being sold, Feeling better, the people have been mak-ing money and spending it more

Ing money and spending a more freely.

"But, in spite of this, there has been little to indicate that the public has been looking to the future in fatth and confidence. Until very recently, new business enterprises and purchases of real estate have continued close to low ebb. These are criteria of the public confidence in business prospects.

"Now, however, the log Jam of fear has been broken. Thousands of homeowners have cleaned up most of their overdue taxes. Real estate companies and banks have they hold. The public has proved believes in Michigan and is convinced of its stability in the years to come, I look for this new confidence to accelerate the processes of real recovery.

Toy pointed out that when Michigan was undergoing its great industrial expansion and people were coming here from all over the country, the percentage of families owning their homes decreased. "New comers did not feel sure enough of their future to the themselves down to the land." he declared. "As Michigan's expansion continued and confidence knew, home ownership again increased. This has been true throughout our history. When the people of a state put their hard earned cash into homes, that state is headed for tell gooded business improvement into topretical more and provided for its people."

They would talk a mind and a lot. Then she would say, "Perhaps my father could get you a Job I in the city."

And he would enswer as he had the other time she had suggested. It is the the suggested in the city of the suggested in the city of the suggested in the winter I help my father with the garage."

"But, I thusty, don't you want to be somehody?"

The boys she knew were always saging, and only half of it was in fun, "When I get to be the city's best known surgeon—" or "I'll be a better judge than he is when—"

Rusty would say, "I am somebody," with a fissh of his strong while teeth, and a gleam in life better judge than he is when—" and he'd kies her ear and may be he'd thill her with, "I'ella, will you slay here and marry me! Don't go back to the city tometrew with your parents."

If only he would say it.

But Rusty suggested the bench instead. It was just a hid's party. They were glad to see Rusty and preferred het dogs and burnt marsh mailows.

One of the grief shrited atrumding her uke. Letta thought, I wonder if she was Rusty's girl!

"All I do the whole day through Is deem of yon—"

"All I do the whole day through Is dream of you-"

"All I do the whole day through is dream of you."

Everybody was listening. But she was singing it to Busty.

Leila wondered if Michael fell like that when she deserted him and the Beach club pad the crowd, for musty, guardian of the public beach, and his gang.

"Come on, Rusty. Let's go," Leila had had enough,
"O. K. I We're off to Dick's, kids. Don't do anything I'd do."
"The seeling you." The girl with the guitar called after them.
"Who is a kie?"
"Dot Keeston."
"Stiller"
"Dot Keeston."
"Stiller"
"Why noblain certaitly. I didn't mean it to sound that way."
"Skip it."
"They were in the shadows and he caught her roughly in his arms. "Jiaby, 1.—" Leila thought Dot and some boy passed by, but sha wasn't sure.

It must have been Dot, though, sure.

It must have been Dot, though, because she was at Dick's when they finally arrived. "Helloft they all said canually, Dick's was just an old barn. The orchestra consisted of four pieces and what they lacked in must they made up in noise. Apple highs were a quarter and they were the best bet because Dick made his own applejack. The crowd was almost wholly native and chauffeurs from the occan colony.
