FOOTBALL MARKET SURVEY

(Christian Science Monitor)

Marlin L. Daves, Governor of Ohio and son of a famous tree surgeon, has learned that football players do not grow on gooseberry bushes. Nor on the academy ivy which, in some, entwines the hearts of the old grads. "Klutz," the towers of "over fair" Klutz. Mr. Daves has found a larger number of them on the state pay roll.

Not as football players, of course, for with the quaint ideas of amateurism in athletics which along with "Trojan history and Elizabethan drama, that would never do. Still, knick-knacks of the pick-nick tournaments have to call, even as more ordinary mortals, cannot sell chicle themselves, even with sport page headlines, however warming these may be in other respects.

Hence when it is considered that half of more of the men studied in many universities of the United States are at least partially self-supporting by some employment, it is not altogether remarkable that youths in pursuit of knowledge about lateral passes as well as the binomial theorem have to subsidize their endeavors by some sort of applied elbow grease. Real complications arise when the subsidy comes secretly from later, eastern backers who figure that the advertising value of a winning team is an indispensable item of road will on the Alma Mater's ledger. The impact of the change on traditions of scholarship and amateurism has been a subject of concern for several years. It is discussed in a very thoughtful article by Dean Christian Gauss of Princeton University in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Reading his analysis one feels that the game cannot be given back to the boys so long as the "appeal court" of "no de drive" would fill up 50,000-seat stadiums at several dollars a ticket. In this respect the incursion of professional football may offer a hope to the college game.

The men who frankly make a business of their skill are likely to furnish the public more of the showmanship it craves. Collegians who would like to play the game for its own sake as an adjunct, rather than in Government, to Daves's sarcastic words—"the supreme purpose of higher education," may win a larger place in the lineup.

INDIAN SUMMER

The balmy and warm days enjoyed over the weekend might be called by many our Indian Summer since they followed an unusually cold spell experienced during the World Series games. Ask any baseball fan who braved the chilly atmosphere to watch the mighty battle between the Tigers and Cubs. It was quite wintry.

There is a difference of opinion as to what the term "Indian Summer" means. It is commonly known as a period of warm or mild weather late in Autumn or in early winter, usually characterized by clear or cloudless sky and by a hazy or smoky appearance of the atmosphere, especially near the horizon. The term is commonly applied to such a period occurring in October or more commonly in November. The name is of American origin, the reason for it being unknown; it is now also used in England. In England, the period, when occurring in November, is also called St. Martin's summer (St. Martin's Day being November 11), when occurring in October, St. Luke's Summer or Little summer of St. Luke (St. Luke's Day being October 18).

It is thought the Indians gave the white settlers the meaning of it and because they did it has been referred to since as Indian summer just as we refer to Indian corn, Indian hemp, Indian pudding, Indian turner or Indian tobacco.

SOME GOOD ADVICE

About the only good advice to be given about a cold is to try and avoid contracting one. If people realized how serious the common cold can become, they would take such advice thoughtfully.

A cold may take effect in a variety of ways. It may seem to be located in the head, nose or throat, but as a matter of fact affects the entire system. If permitted to develop it causes the system to be broken down and when this occurs it takes time to make a cure. The only way to avoid colds is to prevent them from getting a hold on you and this requires that just the moment you feel you are catching one you will do something. A good sweat will often lead off a cold—but even this is a dangerous proceeding as pneumonia may set in. Hence, it is wise to be on your guard against the common cold and not treat it lightly. If you find a cold getting hold of you it is safe to go on a hot diet, such as milk toast, and go to bed. There are so many things that will cure a cold that a doctor's advice is never considered necessary, and there are always good friends who stand by ready to suggest a remedy without charging anything for it. But the sensible man or woman, if they value their health, will seek medical advice at the outset and not wait until it develops into a case for the doctor.

MILLIONS IN ART

A great deal of art appreciation today has a considerable economic basis. As much as we may desire to abate the pecuniary world, when we turn to the fine arts, very palpable reminders of monetary values are continuously forced to us. The Museum of Art in New York's "Mother" was exhibited a few years ago in America, the display gained considerable showmanship from armed guards which was necessary, ostensibly to protect it. A common topic among the crowds which viewed the canvas was its financial worth.

On November 5, an exhibition of paintings and drawings by Vincent Van Gogh is to be shown in the Museum of Art in New York. The collection is valued at $1,000,000. The pictures are now on their way to America, and plans have been made for their transfer from the steamer under a heavy guard.

Supreme paradox, Vincent Van Gogh suffered degradation and impoverishment during his life (1853-1890). Most of his pictures he sold for one cent. For one canvas of "Sunflowers" he asked $100. No sale. Sometime ago the same canvas was sold for $50,000. He offered a young American artist an oil painting for some bread. Van Gogh received the bread, but the unpelting payment was turned down.

Rembrandt's pauper burial was not enough of a lesson. Time and experience do not correct the misunderstanding of the artist. There are today some gnomish contemporaries, who are buffeted around in much the same manner of poor Van Gogh. Either they are in advance of their times, or somehow they fail to fit into the grooves of current fads. Who knows what pictures in utter oblivion today will merit the armed guards of tomorrow?

BUY CENTENNIAL STAMPS FOR 1936

"Purchase all the Michigan Centennial postage stamps which will be out Nov. 1, that you can afford and save them for the big advertising campaign in the Spring of 1936."

This is the suggestion Dr. G. M. Fuller, State Historian, and Secretary of the Michigan Centennial Joint Committee, is sending to all communities planning local celebrations next year, and to all others interested in helping advertise Michigan's recreational resources as well as the many celebrations scheduled for 1936.

"Special postage stamps are not on the market very long," says Dr. Fuller. "To gain the full advertising value of our Michigan Centennial Stamp it will be advisable for Chambers of Commerce, Centennial Committees, and all other civic organizations, to request their local citizens as well as business and industrial firms, to buy up as many stamps as they can afford November 1, and lay them aside for next Spring when they may be used to best advantage to advertise Michigan and its 100th anniversary of statehood."

"Everybody can buy a few stamps and save them until next Spring. Texas will have a big centennial next year. So will Arkansas. It is reasonable to assume both will have commemorative postage stamps. So it is incumbent upon us to protect our own State and its recreational interests by purchasing a good supply of Michigan stamps for use next year. In this way we can conserve several million Michigan stamps for nation-wide distribution in 1936 along with those other states having Centennial Celebrations. Let the slogan in every community be:

"BUY MICHIGAN CENTENNIAL STAMPS FOR 1936."

SCOUT NEWS

TROOP 46

An exhibition of Indian craft by Mr. Bates furnished entertainment for the members of Troop 46 at their meeting last week.

As a result of his living among the Indians and traveling in the west, Mr. Bates has collected many interesting articles on Indian craftsmanship. He exhibited rugs, blankets, pottery, bows and explained how rugs were made. He also displayed bracelets, rings, necklaces, and articles made of silver. He concluded the program with a talk about Indian customs.

The Scouts were grateful for the visit of Mr. Bates.
