BEFORE AND AFTER

(Christian Science Monitor)

One swallow does not make a summer, but evidently it does make a driver. Proof that one gulp drink can make motorists "instruments of death on the highways" was shown in tests conducted by Dr. H. A. Hecker before the American safety congress in Louisville, the other day. The Milwaukee physician gave seven voluntary assistants a series of simple tasks—sorting a pack of cards, threading a needle, unspooling and operating a food brake to be performed before and after drinking a single cocktail.

The before-drinking performance was a cinch. To the seven subjects adding through a second test, the cocktail did queer things. They fumbled the cards, threading the needle through the typing by scrambling the alphabet and wound up with a slow-motion display of how not to coordinate a red stop light and the brake pedal. All in one gulp of a "harmless" cocktail.

In 1935 automobile shows are all set for the green light. Automotive engineers seemingly have stamped the last word in safety equipment upon every shiny, showroom specimen. Actually the motorist has the last word. A safety guarantee by the owner, evidenced by unremitting caution is as essential as mechanical safeguards. Careful workmanship merits careful operation—the sane intelligent play of human facilities in driving a car as that which motivates its maker. The before and after liquor tests at Louisville stress the importance of the human equation in promoting highway safety. They put renewed emphasis upon the inescapable conclusion that even one drink is one too many.

FRIENDSHIP NEEDS TEAMWORK

The late President Fawcett of Brown University said of friendship—and it is true as well as of love—that it needed teamwork to continue. He put it thus:

"We can overlook flaws so long as teamwork continues. To sit still and to look at our friend is to criticize him and lose him. To work with him—steadily, patiently, hopefully—is to keep him, and to find constantly new reserves and resources in him."

The secret seems to lie in associations in work and not merely in pleasures. There is another slant to the familiar complaint of "woman in business" beside its effect on employment. It is designed, unconsciously, to bring the sexes into a happier companionship than they might otherwise attain.

And then, companionship—camaraderie, is in a way a mental art. It must be practiced. It is a fine thing to be known as a companionable person, one whose social presence others unconsciously seek, no matter what the alleged barriers of age.

Although the twelve companions Jesus picked out to be with him and to learn and share his mission were on different spiritual levels, and although some of them were closer to him than the others, toward the close of his life he said to them: "I have called you my friends."

Association and the working together as teacher and students had brought them into oneness of mind and purpose that death could not break.

IS IT QUITE FAIR?

(Christian Science Monitor)

"When a feller don't need a friend" might be called the gist of some wise and timely observations by the astute appraiser of men and methods, Lewis E. Laves, warden of Sing Sing, at the Atlanta congress of the American Prison Association.

Courteously, not to say tactfully, the warden implies that pushing the psychiatrist on to the prisoner is taking rather an unfair advantage of the latter. In fact, he bluntly stated that the activities of the former in the present-day prison system constitute "a most troublesome question." Mr. Laves finds the "very nauseating nature" of some of the questions asked of prisoners by learned theorists "precludes a truthful reply."

It may be unfair to psychiatry, he adds, but all the personnel of a prison sees is "that the average prisoner after an interview with a psychiatrist is resentful, sullen and intractable."

"If persons 'on the outside' indulge in the luxury of paying to learn whether they have an introvert or an extrovert complex, they at least don't have to. But isn't it rather piling on the punishment to poke unpleasant personal questions at those who cannot escape their interrogators? 'Preserve us from our friends,' is probably clinched by more than one penitentiary cell.

SANER AUTOMOBILE DEMAND

(Exchange)

The new cars are here. Aren't they beautiful? Compare the lowest priced autos with those costing twice as much—yes, those of 1935 costing four times the present day price. There is no comparison. The so-called "cheap" price range of 1935 is not cheap. It is luxurious. It rides like a rocking chair. It holds the road at high speeds. Its power plant is a marvel of compactness and efficiency. It is a bazaar. The average "cheap" car of 1935 costs from $500 to $5,000 to cover the tastes and demands of the prospective buyers. Today the range is closer—much closer. From $500 to $1,500 about catches the people of Rochester. There are few, very few, $2,000 cars in this village today. We doubt if there will be in the near future. The reason is that $1,500 will buy almost anything as a car.

Mostly made by Hutton, seconded by Hamilton, that Lloyd Gulien be appointed Justice of the Peace to fill vacancy. Carried.

A SAFE RULE

Fall and winter season do far more than change the picture outside your door—they set up hazards that must be guarded against.

Among these is the danger arising from carbon monoxide, or auto fumes, a danger which, despite the annual warning of newspapers, claims many lives annually. Carbon monoxide cannot be seen, and it cannot be detected by its odor. Its effect is so swift that death can result before one is aware of its presence. Those chilly mornings make it a hazard in every garage in the city and car owners who do not guard against it face far more danger more deadly than they can encounter in any kind of traffic.

There is but one way to safeguard against death from carbon monoxide gas, and that is so simple anyone can apply it. It is to start the motor on a chilly morning without first being sure that the garage doors are open. Always do that and your name will not be added to the long list of those who will meet death this fall and winter from carbon monoxide gas.
