PUBLIC SPEAKING PUPILS PRACTICE WITH TELEPHONE

Telephones are used to teach classes in public speaking by Arthur J. Petrimoulx, instructor in a number of Catholic high schools in Detroit. Students are assigned in pairs to prepare their speeches, and when delivering their talk they stand, each with an unconnected telephone in his hand, at opposite sides of the room, and deliver their addresses to each other "over the telephone."

"Ridiculous though it may seem," declares the instructor, "such use of the instruments lends an atmosphere of reality to the conversations, to the end that self-consciousness is dispelled to a marked degree. Delivery of the speeches, which are original and along practical lines, assumes in many cases a naturalness and flexibility of tone which indicates that the student 'feels like himself'. Incidentally, the students also are taught the proper way to use the telephone effectively, the right distance to place the lips from the transmitter, and the elements of 'telephone courtesy.'"

Mr. Petrimoulx considers the idea of talking through unconnected telephones just as important as having students speak before mirrors, as is done by many public speaking instructors.

Paisley Shawls

The famous Paisley shawls were manufactured at Paisley, in Scotland. Thread was first made there in 1722 and it was the scene of the first manufactured handkerchiefs in 1743. The town is a short distance from Glasgow.

The first Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to hold divine services for Navy personnel was President Franklin D. Roosevelt. On Easter Sunday April 1st, 1934, the President in the absence of a chaplain read the service on the Submarine U. S. S. Nourwal.
