TELEPHONE'S RING HOLDS UP MAN

While a bandit, a short time ago, was holding up Laverne L. Webb, a cashier at the Coca-Cola Bottling Works in St. Louis, the telephone rang. The bandit had just obtained $92 in cash from the cash register when he noticed the safe and ordered Webb to open it. It was at that opportune moment, while Webb was kneeling in front of the safe looking at the combination, which the bandit held a gun which he was using as a persuader, that the telephone bell rang. The ringing of the telephone bell caused the bandit to run out of the place, thereby saving the contents of the safe.

Dressing, for a child under school age, may be either a pleasant experience or a disagreeable task, depending on the attitude of the parent, say home economics experts at Michigan State College. Children under three years old enjoy wearing their own clothes and towel, and a box or stool on which to stand while washing. Likewise, they will enjoy undressing and dressing if they have their own hanger for their clothes, and are taught to lay their clothing out in proper order.

A three-year-old must not, however, be expected to carry through the entire process of dressing. It is enough, that, encouraged by the parent, he attempts to remove simple garments, and to discover the proper order of putting on clothing. Even if the youngster does appear slow and awkward, he must be allowed sufficient time to do these things for himself.

A shoe that does not go on easily, although a mere tug to the foot, is a problem to the child. Three-year-olds, and no child should be faced with the problems of a hard knot or tying a bow knot until he is five or six. Furthermore, if clothing is in good repair and dressing a much lessening experience than if he has to struggle with buttons that are too large for the button holes, or with safety pins where buttons should be. It is not asking too much of a child to look to him to take his clothing from the lower drawers in chests, although the selection of the day's garments is too much for him.

Finally, as the child gains proficiency in undressing and dressing,

WPA BUILDING 5,000 MILES OF ROADS IN STATE

Nearly 5,000 miles of improved roads is the Federal Government's contribution to the farmers of Michigan through the Works Progress Administration.

Of the total mileage about 100 miles is new construction, and the remainder is many localities, dirt roads that were little more than trails, almost impassable in winter, will be replaced with hard surface roads of standard width, affording an outlet to main highways.

The farm-to-market road program, sponsored by the road commissions of the various counties, supplements and rounds out the program of the State Highway Department, making the elaborate state network accessible to rural areas heretofore neglected.

Because of their practical value to the farmer, these projects are on the preferred list of the Works Progress Administration in Washington, and work on them is being speeded up wherever possible. Improved county roads also will make available to tourists pleasant side trips off the main traveled highways.
