Rebuilding—On A Rock

(Christian Science Monitor)

Time has melted the rugged stone fences lining New England's farms—fences, mutely testifying to the unsold industry of the pre-revolutionists. Waves have lapped away but little of Salem's stanch, old Derby Wharf, where once tall-legged Yankee clippers straggled to be off to the seven seas.

The spirit that cleared New England land and carried its homely products to the world could find no more in 1936. If proof thereof was needed, it was vividly offered this week.

Even while the Connecticut and Merrimack were rising to presently sweep out farms, factories, plans for reconstruction were well under way. In response to telegrams from the Christian Science Monitor, governors of the New England states disclosed they were asking legislatures for money and men to repair damage and build flood prevention works.

These thoughts of rebuilding, of forestalling recurrence, were concurrent with the steps for immediate alleviation of temporary distress. There was not a moment's thought of doing otherwise.

As flood waters recede, the American people are certain to find the will and the way to rebuild on foundations no less solid than the stone walls' sited upon its rugged soil. These are the enduring tokens of a great tradition, symbols of the spirit that largely cradled a young nation and made it grow to man's stature in the community of nations.

"It Is Not Spring—Not Yet—"

(Exchange)

Cautiously, yet with some certainty, a poet sang, "It is not Spring—yet—!" although the snow confessed to having seen, in the Berkshires, in April, the willows and the birches taking on color; and yet, so early, it is still the doubtful, unquiet end of Winter.

Nevertheless, as March waikes away with its cold rain, the last remaining bedraggled banks of snow and moves on toward April, many an observer has found indelible signs of returning spring. He sees his freshness in the light green of forsythia stocks and in the crimsoning shrubs in a park or along a river bank.

He knows that, somewhere, in March, the budding is showing green under their bark, and elms are blinding of lacy leaves. He associates with other days and places, perhaps, the dogwood clothed in white, or the starry magnolia blossoms, or the purpling trams on an apple orchard. He is aware that the delicate snowdrop has made its usual appearance in some sheltered corner, and the flags are pushing up green spikes through some dreary-looking patch of last year's lawn.

From all his fair, familiar ways, spring has come to mean much more than a season, having unvaried habits of appearance. It is a remembrance, a well of hope and expectancy. It speaks of promise and fulfillment, of that continuance of good, whose burgeoning the chill experiences of discouragement and despair cannot long suppress.

Man and The Motor Car

(Exchange)

The National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters has issued a book, "Man and the Motor Car," designed for the high school of the nation. The book is edited by Albert W. Whitney, Associate General Manager of the Bureau, and represents the common sense and experience of many experts, including safety and automotive engineers, and teachers from our foremost institutions of learning.

The book is about as exhaustive a treatise on the driving problem as anyone could wish. It does not limit itself to a technical discussion of driving a car, but treats the whole social phenomenon of the automobile, and its meaning to America in a highly interesting and simple fashion. There are chapters on "The Driver," "His Nature and His Habits," "Codes of the Road," "The Art of Driving," "Your Car," "To Maintain It," "The Pedestrian in the Automobile Age," and so on. At the end of the 289 pages of text, there is an appendix which includes a series of questions whereby the student may be tested as to just how well he has retained the information the book contains.

Many sketches and diagrams scattered through the chapter add clarity and interest.

A number of states require that safety education be made a part of high school curriculums—schools in other states have voluntarily adopted safety courses. And it is difficult to see how any branch of study could be more practical use to the growing generation. Today there is an automobile registered for every six persons in the country—tomorrow the ratio may be one to every three or less. And, as car speeds are increased and greater mechanical excellence is attained, the automobiles toll of death, injury and property destruction soars.

The automobile and road engineers have done their part to make motoring safe—the driver has failed. And only an aggressive educational campaign to show the youth of the land how cars may be properly operated can assure that the driver of the future will live up to the responsibility that devolves upon all who take the wheel of the car.

"Man and the Motor Car" seems an ideal textbook for its purpose. It is to be sold at cost, the sole interest of its publishers being to obtain the widest possible use of the volume. It should receive an enthusiastic reception from educators of the country.

A Graceful Jesture

(Exchange)

An interesting bit of news last week was that a Lexington, Massachusetts farmer, in his will, left to Great Britain a plot of ground on his farm where were buried British soldiers killed in the historic battle of the Revolution. It was really a graceful gesture. Now if Great Britain will erect some fitting monument on the spot it will serve as a testimonial that all the bitterness of the ancient quarrel has gone, and testify to the long unbroken and deepening friendship that exists between two great English speaking peoples drawn together by a great common heritage.

From Joke to Landmark

(Exchange)

Forty years ago this spring jokesmiths and humorists were making the world laugh at an amazing news item from Würzburg, Germany. A professor of physics at the University there had announced the discovery of a ray which permitted him to see through solid objects!

When he was asked what it was he said he didn't know. He feebly called it an "X" (unknown) ray. Today it is called the X-ray or the Roentgen ray, after its discoverer, Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen. Today tuberculosis specialists rate the X-ray as the most important aid in the diagnosis of this disease.

The importance of the X-ray plate in the diagnosis of tuberculosis is apparent when one considers that in its early form, tuberculosis has no symptoms and that curative treatment must begin as soon as possible because there is no specific cure for the disease. The X-ray is the solution to the problem. Even slight changes in the lung cast typical shadows on the X-ray plate and persons who may have developed a serious tuberculosis condition are enabled to take necessary preventive measures.

Many persons do not need an X-ray to "make sure" but tuberculosis. The tuberculin or skin test is the first step in the modern "screening" process. Those who do not react to the tuberculin test are assured that tubercle bacilli are not present in the body. Those who do react are advised to have an X-ray to "see" whether any damage has been done to the lung tissue. Many times the disease is discovered in its earliest form—childhood type. And a step has been taken that would have been impossible without the aid of Roentgen's ray.

Tuberculosis is a needless disease. You can protect yourself against it so easily. Avail yourself of the modern weapons that fight it. You family physician will tell you how. So will the Michigan Tuberculosis Association.
