Lloyd's Letter

Dear People:—
"Dark Hours" are experienced by most people.
The tilting of an auto rearvision mirror and the kindly advice of a Baptist Minister friend assisted in my passing through my "Darkest Hour." (I'm supposed to be
M. E.)

Hour." (I'm supposed to be M. E.)
Titting the mirror shut away the image of my much loved foreclosed home, receding in the distance, as we followed the moving van to another home, rested. (Work, planning, money invested, all prone, so it seemed). Latter, the minister's kindly word or "Yes, 10 percent is gone, but, 90 percent is gone, but, 90 percent left—wife, kids, health, friends, church, schools, etc., and some one will later enjoy your former efforts," helped us to regain our sense of values.

Several times this year we have lighted "dark hours" for people whose vision has been blurred by being to close to their problem of losing property. There is no need for you to worry alone. Sing, your, problem to us, we will gladig help you. We need property to sell.

Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,
LLOYD S. GULLEN

A Kennedy?

The origin of the name Kenwedy 'Canuntingue' meaning the head of a sept or clim. The Brands as a surrouna were undoubtedly of Carlek, in Scotland. Prior to the pear 1259, Nell, earl of Carrick, granted a charter to Roland of Carrick, who is proved to be the ancestor of the Kennedys. The family afterward bore the name of Kennedy and, according to Scottish custom, the sons of Kennedy serve called McKennedy or McKennedy spelled variously.

The story of how one McKenane with his sons and great following of kinsmen overthrew the Danes in Carrick and obtained the strong thrilling one. It was this strong hold which became their fair cas the where the "Chief of the Low land Kennedys took their stile of for long space and were called "Lairs of Donour," because of the Don of the hill above the house. Gilbert Kennedy was the forebear of two lines of Kennedys in America.

Kennedys began migration with Rev. Thomas, who located in Tyrone, Ireland, in 1642. His son, John, also a Presbyterian minister, John, also a Presbyterian minister, of County Donegal, Ireland, was the father of Andrew, who was born in 1747. He came to America and located in Pennsylvania previous to the Revolution. It is recorded that he was a man of property which he used to advance the cause of the American colonies during the struggle for independence. His large estate in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, was long in nossession of sylvania, was long in possession of spivania, was long in possession or his descendants.

There were early Kennedy emi-grants to Virginia and Maryland, a great many of them were rela-tives of the Pennsylvania family. O Public Ledger, Ina.—WNU Service.

SUCCESSFUL ENTERPRISE

ONA was gind that she had gone to see "Storm of Love" before meeting. Cruig Gillman. For, after watching the superb performance of Alberta Rawson, Mona knew that her own problem was solved. Alberta, leading lady, had shown her the light. That is, Mona feit that if she could act toward men as Alberta acted toward them, she would be as successful in real life as the leading hidy was on the stage. She couldn't help it.

after a hard-fought battle.

It was two days later, at Mabel Sharon's Long Island home, that Mona was presented to Craig Gilliam. "I know you'll adere him," Mabel gushed. "Everyone does, Tee told him so much about you." "Really?" said Mona indifferently. She fuffed out her hair and dabbed lipstick on her mouth. From across the room Mabel watched her with a curlous little from. "Well, anyvag," she said floally, "Let's go down. Crilig's been here an hour."

And so they went downstairs and out onto the terrace where Mona was presented to Crilig Gillman Sight of him gave her a little shock. The shock has been seen a little shock. The shock has been seen a little shock. The shock has been shown that has been shock and stocked and acted. Ten minutes later, alone with him, she said: "By the war, Mr. Gillman, have you happened to see Alberta Ilawson in her now play?"

"You mean 'Storm of Cove?"

"You mean 'Storm of Love?"

"You mean 'Storm of Love?"

"You mean 'Storm of Craig's eyes shom. "Indeed I have Isn't she superb?"

Monn's heart sank. She knew now what had happened. Craig had seen the play and it had affected him as it had her. He was trying to mind the acting of Orlon Chase. He, too, must have been confronted with an found a solution to it in Mr. Chase's performance. Well, that at least put them oa an even basis, with Mona having a slight edge because she was cognizant of the role each was playing. Yaguuly fearful, he wondered if Albertia's tacties would after all, work but so well in real life.

"You know," said Craig sudden ly. "You remind me of some one."

"Do you mean I look like some one you know?"

"Do you mean I look like some one."

The shook him the mean one wow.

"Do you mean I look like some one you know?"
He shook his head, puzzled, "No. It isn't looks. It's the way you act."
He laughed, "It's extremely pleas-ing," tually she'd have to confess to him.

After that week-end at Mabeb Sharon's, Craig Gillman called on her aimost daily. She tried to keep lit up, to act indifferently, slightly bored, languorous. She tried, especially, because Craig Gillman continued to play his role, on act and talk and look as much as possible like Orion Chase. She hated him for it. Or she tried to hate him. And then, abruptly, and lidea occurred to her. Craig was acting that way because he thought he was impressing her. He fedred to return to his normal self because of the possibility that her interest might wane.

This thought was at once explanatory and reassuring. Mona idecided that at the first opportune moment she would assure him that as Grigi Gillman he would aspend to her a great deal more than as Orion Chase.

The opportunity came sooner than she expected. It came in to her a great deal more than as of orior Chase.

The opportunity came sconer than she expected. It came in fact, the next afternoon. Cruic called to take her driving. In the hall, helping her on with her coat, he suddenly selzed her shoulders and slooked down into her eyes. "Mona, Tm in love with you, have been in love with you always, will love you forever and ever. Will you marry me?" Mona caught her breath. Mona felt herself reeling. She put out a hand, swayed forward. He caught her in his arms, looked Heicaught her in his arms, looked down at her in concern and alarm. "Mona! Darling! Mona opened her eyes. She sighed. "It—It doesn't make any difference," she said. "I—I guess the shock of realizing how successfully my plan worked was too—much."

Which, despite the fact that he didn't grasp the significance of it, was quite a satisfactory explanation as far as Craig was concerned.
