Tremendous Trifles By ELMO SCOTT WATSON U. S. BECOMES "UNCLE SAM"

EARL in the Nineteenth century Ebenezer and Samuel Wilson were large landowners and meat packers near Troy, N. Y. Well-to-do members of Wilson's were known as "Uncle Ed" and "Uncle Sam." The origin of the outbreak of the War of 1812 New York and New Jersey militia were camped near Albany. Elbert Anderson, Jr., of New Jersey, was given the contract for supplying them with meat. Anderson appointed Samuel Wilson as inspector of these supplies. On every barrel which he passed Wilson stamped the letters "U. S. E. A." signifying that it was supplied to the United States government by Elbert Anderson. One day a soldier asked an Irish cook of Wilson's the meaning of those letters. "Why, that means Elbert Anderson and Uncle Sam," he replied. "Uncle Sam who?" his questioner persisted. "Why, don't you know?" the Irishman said jokingly. "That means Uncle Sam Wilson. He's feeding the army."

This remark was taken up and repeated by the soldiers as the war broke out in 1862. The term became widespread. An Irishman's witty reply to a soldier's question thrust unexpected fame upon Samuel Wilson and resulted in a partnership which cartoonists made familiar throughout the world. Pebbles and Bread Crumbs: French children love to hear tell of the budding genius Andre Marie Ampere, who, while still far too young to deal with numbers, worked out mathematical sums with pebbles and breadcrumbs. Ampere had a sad life. When he was eighteen, in 1793, his father, a justice of the peace, who had withstood the worst excesses of the Revolution, was imprisoned and soon afterwards executed. Only his deep and ardent interests in poetry, music and botany saved the young man from succumbing to his subsequent depression. His one great happiness was in his wife, Julie Caron, whom he met in 1788. After two years' married life, she relates a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer, he had to leave her and his infant son at Lyons, where he had been teaching, in order to earn more money for them by lecturing physics and chemistry at Bourg. It was after writing many brilliant articles on the mathematical theory of gambling, demonstrating that the chances were against the habitual gambler, that Ampere found a place as professor of mathematics at the Lycee of Lyons. He had scarcely settled in Lyons, however, when his adored wife died.

Pals

By JOHN E. HEDWELL McClure Newspaper Syndicate. With Service. JACK DRAKE sighed heavily as he tossed his legs, uncrossed them, groaned. "What," asked Amy Morton, "can be the matter with you? Sighing?" "Amy," whispered the accused one, "I'm so much in love I'm nearly dazed. I've tried so hard to keep you from me - in fact from everybody but I am - and now my chances are, I'm leaving tomorrow for the South. Jack's eyes were unseeingly riveted on a boat docking at the wharf. Otherwise he might have noted the sudden sobbing of the usually gay Amy, the effort at lightness in her voice. "Are you sure, Jack? Very sure? I thought you might do us first or..." she ended lamely. "But this is the real thing!" he said, "And I must know." "Then," Amy, beseeched gently, "give me until tomorrow. I'll let you know then. But I'm sure, quite sure, you'll be feeling better when I see you."

And kissing him quickly, the girl ran indoors. "Well, of all the..." Words failed Jack for further remark. He sat staring out blankly into the moonlight night. Had Amy had been friends from childhood. From the time he could remember, he had always confided in her. But now, while he was trying to tell her of his love for Charlotte Blair, Amy had gone and taken his attempt as a proposal of marriage to herself. "Good heavens!" he gasped. "If the way she took it, her answer to my proposal will be yes!" The more he thought, the more bewildered he became. If Jack was in a daze, so was Amy. She had always looked upon marriage as a most respectable and almost universal custom to which, some day, she might possibly be called upon to conform. But now it seemed to her the realm of the abstract into the realm of the concrete with a suddenness which was rather startling. There from a life-long friend and confidant into a would-be husband, in her dreams Amy had often visualized such a change in Jack. But the unexpectedness of the fact left her unprepared.

There came a tap at her door. It was Charlotte Blair, who always stopped for a chat with her dear friend Amy on her way to school. "Charlotte, what do you think of marriage?" "What a question!" cried Charlotte. "I think it's something greatly to be desired in advance of the weather? I am as sure Jack Drake is going to propose to me tomorrow as I am that I'll accept him. Hasn't he told you he was in love with me?" You and he are such chums and confidants that I supposed he had." "Amy spent the night sitting at her open window, reliving the evening. So this summer it had not been another flirtation! Jack had been trying to tell her, out there on the porch, that he wanted only advice from her - advice on how to win Charlotte!

She wanted to run away, to hide from those two who would on the morrow be so jubilant, but she went instead for a swim early, because she knew Jack was in all probability he on the beach. He was. "Does love keep one awake, or is it a rendezvous and I'm the unnecessary third?" she slipped at him. "I," he started, "I thought that is, you said..." "Jack," she grinned at him impudently. "I was certain you two had better call it another summer romance - both being such a flirt - but I think," she made a successful effort to appear only pleasantly serious. "I think it's O. K. You'll both understand that each must have his light moments. And so, my blessings, and Charlotte's a grand girl." "Race you to the raft," she added gaily. "Nothing like a good swim to prepare you - for the coming evening." Jack Drake swallowed this "hook, line, and sinker," as the saying is. True, he could not remember having mentioned Charlotte Blair's name in his attempted confidence - but then, of course, Amy must have seen. His attentions to Charlotte had been rather pronounced. "Coming Pal," he cried, diving after her. "And no more cracks. One of these days you'll fall, and then, Oh boy! will I give you the razz!" "Yeah!" she mocked him, "and in the meantime I beat you swimmer!"

John Erskine To Speak In Detroit

John Erskine, best-selling author, educator, composer and pianist, who is also one of the most magnetic speakers on the platform today, will be the Town Hall speaker at the Fisher Theater Wednesday morning, Dec. 2, at 11 o'clock. Mr. Erskine was one of the most popular speakers on last season's program. Next week he will present his brilliant views on an important American problem - a subject in which he is vitally interested - "What Shall We Teach Tomorrow?" "I want to talk," says Erskine, "about new subjects and new methods which I believe are coming into education, or should come."

Thanksgiving Day is for Everybody

You do not have to be rich to be thankful. You do not even have to be fortunate. What a burlesque our annual observance would be, if all the sick, the poor, the handicapped ones of earth, had to stand outside the Thanksgiving circle. Thanksgiving Day is for everybody. It is a day when we count our blessings instead of adding up our woes - and, after all, each of us has something to be thankful for. The spirit of this day cannot be expressed with the words, "turkey and trimmings." Thanksgiving Day is a symbol of the courage, the faith, the quenchless hope of mankind.
