"She Didn't Belong Here"

(Exchange)
The manager of a hotel, in New York City, suggested that his wife pose as a stranger and ask questions of some of the help he employed. So she asked the doorman where a good meal could be obtained in the neighborhood. He pointed her to a competing restaurant with no mention of the three in the hotel. When called to account for this by the manager, (who said nothing about the inquirer being his wife), the doorman said, "But sir, if you had seen the lady, you would agree that she simply didn't belong here."
H. N. Findley says the story is true. It was another man of the same name but different spelling, who thirty years ago advertised in Cleveland, "Mr. Findley owns in his own restaurants." That's a hard one to beat.

The Rise And Fall Of Debts

(Exchange)
The rise and fall of debts is probably the most conspicuous feature of the business cycle.
Debts are created in prosperity and are reduced or retired in depression.
At the peak of the 1929 boom, brokers' loans reached the total of eight billion dollars. Now these loans have shrunk to approximately 10 per cent of that figure.
Bank loans on all kinds of securities now aggregate less than one half of their total at the maximum.
By default and amortization, real estate loans have been reduced in comparable proportion. Loans against goods purchased on the partial payment plan have been paid down until they are now but a fraction of their peak.
Those who wonder why people have not been buying much goods during the last three years can get the answer from the study of these figures. Consumers have been paying in debts. When the cycle is completed, and debts are down to the point where creditors no longer press debtors, or where debtors feel secure in creating new obligations, demand will rise and production will go forward.

Character

(Exchange)
When we recommend a man for a job or for membership in a club, we often say, "He is a man of excellent character."
What does this mean?
William James quotes approvingly the definition of J. S. Mills, who said, "A character is a completely fashioned will." By "will" he meant a tendency to act in a firm, prompt, and definite way in every emergency. A man of "excellent character" is a person whose behavior in any situation can be charted in advance. He will pay his bills, observe the rules, count his puts, behave like a gentleman, and accept responsibility.
James argued that a man's character is the consequence of a mass of automatic habits, so deeply ingrained that every stimulus is followed by a definite action. A man of feeble character is one who wants vaguely to do the right thing, but because of long indifference is unable to generate the energy to act.

What Every Woman Should Know

(Exchange)
A husband likes to throw newspapers and ashes on the floor. . . He likes to invite friends for dinner unexpectedly. . . He likes a lot of paint on other women but doesn't care for much on her. . . He prefers not to be told that he is getting fat or bald. . . He wants to drive the automobile himself. . . He hates to pay bills. . . He resents suggestions for personal improvement. . . He regards his speculative and gambling losses as his private affairs. . . He dislikes to be closely questioned about anything. . . He'll spend $15 at a club and then crab because a six-day-old ham bone was thrown into the garbage before he got around it. . . He'll buy her an $800 gown and later raise a scene if she loses $120 at bridge. . . He thinks he'd be rich if he'd stayed single. . . He insists that he likes plain food but always complines his hostesses on special dishes that are served him. . . He doesn't care how much a refrigerator costs if it delivers ice cubes quickly and easily. . . He's sure he's living way beyond his income. . . When he gets a quiet evening at home he falls asleep in his chair. . . He's a prospect for any busy that set
