

New York World's Fair Site From 9,000 Feet Up

NEW YORK, (Special) —Photography and ingenuity combine to show about how the New York Fair will appear in 1939 to visitors arriving from the west in planes flying at an altitude of one and three-quarters miles. Camera men made that "shot" from a plane over the New York landscape. Shown in the foreground is the strip along the Hudson—Manhattan with its towers girded about the Empire State building (center) which houses present headquarters of the Fair—and in the middle distance the 1216 1/4 acre site of the 1939 international exposition. To the right lies Brooklyn and, beyond, the hinterland of Long Island. At the extreme left, spanning the East river, is the new Triborough bridge over which many of the 50,000,000 visitors expected at the Fair will move to the convenient parking lots. A planigraphic table model of the site has been made to give the negative of the air view to show the grid of the central exhibit zone, the boat basin being constructed on Flushing Bay and the lagoons that will feature the exposition's amusement zone.

It could only be realized that the church and the church school are for its members; its members being all believers in Christ; and to be believers in Christ one must seek after the truth which is contained in the word of God.

Brotherhood meeting, January 13th, 7:30 p. m. Details will appear in the church announcements.

Confirmation class will meet at the parsonage, January 9th, at 9:00 a. m.

WHO ARE YOU?

The Romance of Your Name
By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

An Edmonstone?

THIS family originated in northern France, with Count Edmonstone, a duke of Flanders, whose son William, the Conqueror, was the special attendant to Queen Matilda, wife of King Malcolm.

The king bestowed upon him the land of Edmonstone and Yester for faithful service.

Archibald Edmonstone was the first of the family in America. He was for the westward-moving home-seekers. Their goal seemed so far distant, and they pestered young William Clayton great deal with their questions of "How far have we come today?"

So, being an ingenious young man, he devised a way to answer.

He measured a mile on the trail that they traversed one day, then marked a wagon wheel at a certain point on its circumference. Keeping his eye on the marked spoke he counted its revolutions to the mile. Next he devised a ratchet which moved a wheel which recorded accurately the distance the caravan traveled daily. That same principle is used in speedometers today.

Edmonstone

settled land in 1633 in Maryland and Virginia, and succeeded his father as commander of the Old world legions of the Edmonstones, all associated with it. These legends go back to Roman times when the mandrake root was considered a good luck charm. Old books, writers in the Detroit Free Press, contain very specific directions for digging up the roots of the mandrake so that a man of good luck may be derived from it. One of these old accounts reads:

"To a dog to the plant while it is being dug. When it is being dug, the dog will give a great shriek, for if a man should dig the plant alone, he will die in a short space after."

At one time Englishmen provided a good market for mandrake roots. People who sold them pretended that these roots had the power of increasing whatever man's was placed near them. Sellers claimed that the roots grew nowhere else but in China and were brought to England with great risk and danger. As a matter of fact the mandrakes were growing right in England's own fields.

Magnetic Hills

In California that is supposed to have magnetic power sufficient to pull an automobile up at the rate of 25 miles an hour. The so-called magnetism is magnetism and cannot climb them without power from their engines. The rider is simply the victim of an optical illusion, produced by the contrast in two grades. It is often difficult for a driver among the mountains to tell whether he is going up hill, on the level, or down hill. As he comes out of a sharp curve and when he has turned his steers to still going uphill though his machine will coast without power. In reality he is going down a two-degree grade. Besides the magnetic hill outside Los Angeles, there are similar "magnetic hills" in other mountainous regions, where the same illusion is experienced.

Tremendous Trifles

SPEEDOMETER

"STEP on it, boy!" And the S needle on the speedometer climbs up—up—up—sixty—seventy—eighty miles an hour!

It wasn't that back in 1846 when Brigham Young was leading his Mormon colony across the plains to Utah. Then the wagon trains crawled painfully along and might take a month or more of days.

Somewhere in Nevada the Mormon leader pushed on to find the best route, leaving the slower-moving wagons behind to follow along the trail which he would mark out for them. One of these parties was in charge of a young fellow named William Clayton.

A long road and weary road it was for the westward-moving home-seekers. Their goal seemed so far distant, and they pestered young William Clayton great deal with their questions of "How far have we come today?"

So, being an ingenious young man, he devised a way to answer. He measured a mile on the trail that they traversed one day, then marked a wagon wheel at a certain point on its circumference. Keeping his eye on the marked spoke he counted its revolutions to the mile. Next he devised a ratchet which moved a wheel which recorded accurately the distance the caravan traveled daily. The First American Merchants

Depended on Mouth to Mouth Advertising

They had no better means of advertising. When they told visitors to our shores about its wonders it took three months to carry the news home, and by that time it was no longer news, for something newly exciting happened every day then as now.

Today the merchants of America can tell their news through the columns of newspapers and it is no sooner out of their mouths than it is off the press. You, Mr.

Merchant of Farmington, can use the columns of The Farmington Enterprise as your mouthpiece, and your message will reach the right people in record quick time.
