No Regrets

VALERIA's affair with Eliot Harvey had proved extremely gratifying. After all, Eliot was the most handsome and the most glamorous man at Newlake Lake, and the confession of his love had rather flattered her vanity. But the duration had been brief. Two months, to be exact. She had smiled a little while the night she handed back his ring.

"It's been swell fun, Eliot, but it can't last. The feeling's all on the surface. It isn't real."

"Not real?" He stared at her, unbelieving. "Good Lord, Val— But she interrupted him with a gesture of fatigue. "It's no use, Eliot. You're far too glamorous and handsome to fall in love. I tried hard, but it didn't work." She patted his hand maternally. "Summer romances are fun, and this has been the best ever. No regrets."

A hurt look came into his eyes, to be replaced an instant later by exaggerated indifference. He tossed the ring, caught it, pocketed it. "So, sister, I guess I can stand it." His eyes held that smug, "it's your funeral" look that so flattered his vanity. She felt released, free again. When Doug Metcalf asked her to attend the Country club ball with him she accepted without qualms of conscience. Doug was big and homely. He radiated honesty and dependability. The night he introduced the dance he spoke of Eliot. "Thought there was no harm in asking," he grinned. "You won't find me as spectacular as Eliot."

"You're sweet, Doug. Spectacular men bore me."

He looked at her curiously, seemed on the point of asking a question and thought better of it. She knew that he, like everyone else, was wondering if her heart was broken. Well, let them find out for themselves. Their pity annoyed her. Who was this Eliot Harvey, a god or something?

During the two weeks preceding the ball Eliot made it a point to avoid her, yet at the same time to be near where she was, with some other girl. "He's trying to show me how little he cares," she thought. "He wants me to know it never really mattered."

Her reaction to his attitude was at once amusement and irritation. She wondered why she ever thought of him at all. Certainly she was beginning to doubt her own judgment, wasn't beginning to regret? Or was she? She was human, and every human it hurt just a little to find that everyone thought she was a fool and to discover that the man she believed enamored of her had, actually, not cared at all.

The night of the ball, dancing with Doug Metcalf, she saw Eliot floating by with Sheel Jackson. She was looking down into her upturned face, oblivious to everything else. Valeria felt a little pang, and, impatient at herself, gave her attention to Doug. Doug was watching her and there was worship in his eyes. Good old Doug. He was the type—she drove the thought from her mind. Why couldn't she forget everything for a while and give herself over to the gaiety of the evening?

She tried and succeeded. Horace Nesbit cut in on her and then Noel Venn, and presently she was dancing with Doug again. It was really a swell party. Everyone seemed to be having a good time. Valeria became a part of it, was absorbed by it. She was dancing a dreamy waltz with Doug when Eliot cut in. Surprised, she found herself in his arms almost before his familiar features became recognizable.

"Well, well, well. Look who's here! How's the Don Juan of Newlake?"

"Val, let's go out and get a punch." His tone was almost harsh. Valeria hesitated. "All right," she said. "I could use something like that. It's been a destructive evening. I'm worn out."

They moved into the alcove where the drinks were being served. He led her beyond and through French doors that opened onto the terrace. The place was crowded, but they found a vacant bench behind some shrubbery, and Valeria sat down. It was good to sit. Eliot bent over her. "Listen, Val, I can't stand it! I've been crazy ever since you gave me back the ring. I'm going mad. You've got to come back to me!"

Amazed, she stared up at him. His eyes were burning coals. He stood there, stripped of his pride and dignity, no longer glamorous, no longer the confident Don Juan, the breaker of women's hearts.

"Eliot, you're drunk!"

"I'm not Val, don't you see I'm not! Don't you see how much I love you?" He dropped down beside her and suddenly his head was against her breast. He wept.

Val was frightened and bewildered. So all his indifference, his casual acceptance of her decision to break their engagement, his interest in Sheel Jackson—it had all been pretense! A sham! A mask! An attempt to maintain his Don Juan standing to justify his pride and vanity and conceit.

She stood up, suddenly contemptuous, ashamed of her own doubt, disgusted with his weakness. She looked down at him, without pity or compassion or regret, turned away and went eagerly back to find dependable Doug.

Spirit of Service

A SERVICE that is vital to public welfare puts a special responsibility on those who supply it. Many workers recognize such an obligation. And they include the 8500 men and women behind our telephone in Michigan.

Time and again telephone employees have shown self-sacrifice in the public interest, have faced danger with courage and perseverance. The operator choosing to stay at her switchboard during fire or flood; the plant man maintaining circuits in a heavy storm—their devotion to duty has become a tradition.

Emergencies bring them to your attention, but their spirit of service is in effect day and night, week in and week out. They know the public importance of their work. And they do it well—with skill, promptness and courtesy.

Without that spirit, Michigan would not have the kind of service it is getting today—a fine telephone service as there is available anywhere in the world.
