Always on the Job

Streets are deserted. Homes are dark. Night has wrapped the community in slumber.
In one building, however, a light is still shining. It shines on steadily through the hours of darkness until, at last, the dawn heralds the stir of another day....
That light sums up the eternal vigilance of the telephone. It is truly a beacon of public service, one that stands ready to serve any one, anywhere, any time. And always with the same promptness and skill and courtesy.

All that modern telephone service can mean—all its protection and convenience and comfort—is yours to command twenty-four hours a day. It takes no holidays. It is, in an old familiar phrase, "always on the job."
