Battle Against Orchard Pests Under Way

With the emergence of the cherry fruit fly during the past week, the battle against orchard insect peats is being waged on all fronts, according to the Department of Agriculture. With grape growers spraying for black rot, mildew, dead arm and rose chafer, with currant and gooseberry growers combating leaf spot and mildew, dead arm and rose chafer, with currant and gooseberry growers combating leaf spot and mildew, bear growers with attention to wards codling moth and curcuits and apple growers fighting with pear growers; the latter named as well as the lesser apple worm, the appearance of the cherry fruit fly amounted to last call to arms with cherry growers entering the as cherry leaf spot, brown rot, curcuit on ad signs.

"The first cherry fruit fly emerged in Van Buren county June 10, appearing, in Kent county June 10, appearing, in Kent county is just two days later. It is absolutely necessary to spray now to control this peat and to have a crop of cherries that will peas the marked requirements," said E. G. Mandenberg, head of the orchard and nursery division of the Department of Agriculture. "Approximately five to seven days after these insects are hatched, they start laying eggs in cherries, these eggs later developing into the cherry maggot."

Sharp Dealers, No Maids

Sharp Dealers, No Maids in Old Bergen Quarters There were no good old days for the housemalds of Bergen, Norway, at least not for those who took care of the establishments of the Hansa merchants there. Although these traders, part of a group which controlled the commerce of many large cities in northern Europe during the Middle Ages, went there to live, according to their own regulations they were hort permitted to intermarry with the people of Bergen. Maids, consequently, were not allowed in the merchants' houses, but had to reach through a small door in order to make the beds. For this reason, the beds, which were merely wooden bunks, were built along the room wall, with one door opening on the country of the room. The last could be closed during cold weather, to keep the sleeper warmer.

weather, to keep the skeep.

These bedrooms are but one of the curiostijes which attract travilers. Been to see the Hansa gard or establishment the city per catablishment the city per preserved. Another is the two sets of weights which the merchants used in trading. One of these was heavy, for buying, and the other hight, for selling, so that people lost a few pounds first on the things they sold and then a few more on the merchandise they received in return.

"Sold Down the River"
The expression "sold down the river" originated in ante bellum days, and referred to the practice of slaveholders in disposing of refractory slaves by selling them at public auction down the river (usually the Mississippil) to five other than the selling cotton plantations where they were reduced from comparative case to conditions of the most abject description. In recent times, says Literary Digest, the expression has been revived to denote almost any demotion, or demotion to a condition of mere slavish routine or drudgery.

CONSUMERS POWER COMPANY TO OPEN TOURIST CAMP

Red Bridge Park, newest of the Consumers Power Company free tourist camps, will be officially opened to, public use July 2, as in unscheduled feature of the Amiliane Forest Featural, July 2, it vas announced by Frank G. Bridge Alottment Boosts Farmington City Budget adopted by the City Commission at the last regular meeting of thatgroup. The addition of a bridge improvement appropriation makes this year's budget slightly higher than that of last year. Comparison of both years allotments reveals a duplication in most tiems covered. Despite the increased budget, the assessment roll is only $18 above that of the preceeding year.

Following is the Farmington City Budget for the coming fiscal year.
